Homeless People

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will implement the recommendation of the Social Security Advisory Committee concerning a concerted approach by all the agencies involved, including the health, social services and housing departments, to achieve a permanent solution to the needs of homeless people dependent on temporary board and lodging accommodation.

Mr. Newton: The new regulations on supplementary benefit for board and lodging which will operate from 29 April are designed to ensure that payments go only to those who need them and that the benefit system does not stimulate the provision of inappropriate board and lodging accommodation. We shall continue to do everything possible to support the efforts of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to overcome housing problems, and to encourage health and social services departments to co-operate with housing departments at the local level.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will name the vaccines which caused the 810 adverse reactions reported in 1983 by the yellow card system to the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Committee on Safety of Medicines in fact received 525 reports of suspected adverse reactions to vaccines during 1983. The vaccines reported were:

Influenza (inactivated)
Polio (oral)
Measles (live attenuated)
Yellow fever
Rubella
Pertussis
Salmonella typhi
Salmonella paratyphi B
Cholera
BCG
Diptheria
Tetanus
Tetanus antitoxin
Grass pollen
Specific desensitizing
Tuberculin
Rabies
Dust mite extract
Influenza live attenuated
Corynebacterium parvum extract
Antihaemophilic factor
Hepatitis B surface antigen
Human serum albumin

It is very important to note that a report does not necessarily establish a causal relationship between the reaction and the vaccine concerned.

Drugs

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to provide resources to scientists and researchers to enable them to perform more thorough investigations into the effects of non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs on patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We see no reason at present to provide more funds from a central source for this purpose. Pre-marketing research into the effect of medical products, including these drugs, is undertaken or financed by pharmaceutical companies. Through its stringent examination for evidence of safety, efficacy and quality in all applications for new product licences for these and other medicines, the United Kingdom licensing authority, as advised by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines, actively encourages industry to undertake thorough pre-marketing research.

In the last 2 years the CSM has specially reviewed adverse reactions and the benefit risk ratios of the marketed non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs. The CSM can call on this experience in assessing any drug in this class, both at the licensing stage and following introduction on the market.

Comparatively rare adverse reactions to medicines may not be detectable until the medicines are in wider use than is possible before marketing. The committee therefore monitors all medical products after they have been marketed and pays particular attention to drugs substances which are comparatively new on the market.

National Health Service (Contracting-Out)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he intends to seek with trade union members representing hospital ancillary workers and cleaners and with chairmen of district and regional health authorities to discuss the progress made in improving National Health Service hospitals' standards resulting from contracting-out of services to private firms.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am quite satisfied that health authorities are ensuring that satisfactory standards are maintained. I see no point in national consultations on the subject.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many managing contractors are engaged by district health authorities to operate laundry, catering and other ancillary services; and how many consortia of private firms are used to operate a range of services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 5 March at columns 520-21.

National Health Service (Stock Losses)

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total level of stock losses in the National Health Service.

Mr. John Patten: The 1983-84 accounts of health authorities in England show total stores losses of £2·8 million.

National Health Service (Tendering)

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what rules are applied relating to capital costs and depreciation in determining the award of tenders for laundry, catering and other ancillary services in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We issued specimen contracts for laundry services to health authorities in March 1984 and this included advice on the treatment of capital expenditure at annex 4 of the guidance notes. This guidance is also applicable when tendering for catering or any other ancillary service if capital expenditure is involved. A copy of this document was placed in the Library.

Health authorities should only contemplate new capital investment in support services if that is really the highest priority call on their capital programme. I would expect most authorities to find that capital investment in some aspect of direct patient services commanded higher priority.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the savings which would accrue to the National Health Service from commercial tendering for linen and other clothing and equipment services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to estimate the savings which might accrue nationally from commercial tendering for these services, but I expect every health authority to follow our guidance that linen rental services and similar arrangements should be considered as options for cost saving in support services.

Family Income

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and 11 years, whose gross earnings are (a) £80 and (b) £90 per week and whose rent and rates are £20 and £7, respectively (i) when he is working and (ii) if he was unemployed and assuming that he and his wife were both earning £4 per week disregarded income, and in each case were receiving all benefits to which they were entitled;

(2) if he will estimate the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and 11 years, whose gross earnings are £110 per week and whose rent and rates are £20 and £7, respectively (a) when he is working and (b) if he was unemployed and assuming that he and his wife were both earning £4 per week disregarded income, and in each case were receiving all benefits to which they were entitled.

Mr. Whitney: The net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and eleven years if the man's gross earnings were (a) £80, (b) £90 and (c) £110 a week would be £80.37, £79.82 and £81.33 respectively.

If the family's only income, apart from benefits, was from part-time earnings, and both the man and his wife had £4 of their part-time earnings disregarded for supplementary benefit purposes, the net weekly spending power would be £82.70.

Water rates of £1.50 are assumed to be included in the rates figure of £7. Other, unspecified, assumptions are as in the November 1984 edition of the DHSS Tax/Benefit Model Tables.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and 11 years, whose gross earnings are (a) £130, (b) £140 and (c) £150 per week and whose rent and rates are £30 and £10, respectively (i) when he is working and (ii) if he was unemployed and assuming that he and his wife were both earning £4 per week disregarded income, and in each case were receiving all benefits to which they were entitled.

Mr. Whitney: The net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and eleven years if the man's gross earnings were (a) £130, (b) £140 and (c) £150 a week would be £80.74, £83.04 and £85.14 respectively.

If the family's only income, apart from benefits, was from part-time earnings, and both the man and his wife had £4 of their part-time earnings disregarded for supplementary benefit purposes, the net weekly spending power would be £82.70.

Water rates of £1.50 are assumed to be included in the rates figure of £10. Other, unspecified, assumptions are as in the November 1984 edition of the DHSS Tax/Benefit Model Tables.

Old People (Residence and Maintenance Payments)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total annual sum by year from 1980 paid to claimants in respect of residence and maintenance in old persons' homes.

Mr. Whitney: Separate figures are not available on expenditure on residents in old people's homes. The total expenditure on supplementary pensioners in all types of private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes, based on December figures for each year is as follows:

	£ million
1981	23
1983	90

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries.

National Insurance Pension

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date the increases in prices caused by indirect tax increases in the Budget will be reflected in an increase in the national insurance pension.

Mr. Whitney: Under the provisions of Sections 125 and 126 of the Social Security Act 1975 retirement pensions are increased in November each year at least in line with the movement in the retail prices index in the twelve months to the preceding May. Thus any changes in prices or taxes which have had an effect on the RPI by May 1985 would be reflected in the November 1985 uprating.

Dentists (Discretionary Fees)

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about long delays in the payment of discretionary fees to National Health Service dentists by the Dental Estimates Board in Eastbourne.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our Department has received only one complaint in the past twelve months which came from a member of the public.

Benefits (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons are in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit and (b) unemployment benefit in the Leicester, East constituency, as compared with the whole of the city of Leicester; if he will list the categories under which benefit is claimed; and if he will give the equivalent figures for the past five years.

Mr. Whitney: Leicester, East constituency is served by two of the Department's offices: Leicester (Yeoman street) and Leicester (Norton street). Their boundaries are not coterminous with the Leicester, East constituency. The number of persons in receipt of supplementary benefit at February 1985 and for the preceding five years was:

February	Persons over pension age	Persons under pension age required to register for employment	Persons under pension age not required to register for employment
1985	10,641	11,981	8,623
1984	10,371	11,939	7,875
1983	10,650	11,599	6,678
1982	10,224	9,623	5,543
1981	10,149	6,833	4,733
1980	10,009	3,991	4,410

Leicester city is served by four of the Department's offices. Their boundaries are not coterminous with Leicester city. The number of persons in receipt of supplementary benefit at February 1985 and for the preceding five years was:

February	Persons over pension age	Persons under pension age required to register for employment	Persons under pension age not required to register for employment
1984	18,170	19,559	13,020
1983	18,741	19,555	10,871
1982	18,028	15,967	8,931
1981	17,730	11,339	7,693
1980	17,637	6,503	7,277

Details of the number of persons in receipt of unemployment benefit in the Leicester, East constituency are not available. The number of persons in receipt of unemployment benefit in Leicester in November 1983 (the latest available information) and the five preceding years was:

	Number
November 1983	7,777
November 1982	8,905
February 1982*	9,555
November 1980	8,514
November 1979	3,134
February 1979*	3,273

* Figures for November 1981 and November 1978 are not available.

Benefits

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount of (a) supplementary benefit and (b) unemployment benefit paid to claimants in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and what information he has as to the average number of claimants under each heading during that period.

Mr. Whitney: A total of £5,593 million was paid to all supplementary benefit claimants and £1,497 million to unemployment benefit claimants in the 1983-84 financial year. The estimated average number receiving the benefits at any one time in 1983-84 was 1 million unemployment benefit claimants and 4·4 million claimants of supplementary benefit.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the mean birthweight and standard deviation for (a) total births, (b) live births and (c) stillbirths in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively for (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) England and (iii) each regional health authority.

Mr. John Patten: The figures for 1980 to 1983 are shown in the table. No information for 1984 is yet available.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will classify refusals of severe disablement allowance to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to the following reasons: (i) over pension age, (ii) not incapable of work, (iii) failed the 80 per cent. test, (iv) failed residence and presence conditions and (v) other.

Mr. Newton: The available information as at 12 March is as follows.

	Men	Single and divorced women and widows	Married women
Over pension age	119	71	167
Not incapable of work	5	1	2
Disablement condition not satisfied	16	8	71
Other	34	17	22
TOTAL	174	97	262

Separate information is not available on the number who failed the residence or presence conditions. These cases are included under "Other".

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for severe disablement allowance have been received; and how many claims have been decided at the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: As at 12 March 18,983 claims for severe disablement allowance had been received of which 1,041 had been decided.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) favourable and (b) unfavourable decisions on applications for severe disablement allowance have been made to date.

Mr. Newton: 508 and 533 respectively, as at 12 March.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will classify awards of severe disablement allowance to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to whether they (i) were exempt from the 80 per cent. test on the grounds of age, (ii) were passported to the 80 per cent. test or (iii) passed the 80 per cent. test.

Mr. Newton: The information as at 12 March is as follows.

	Men	Single and divorced women and widows	Married women
Exempt from disablement condition (under 20 when incapacity arose or claim links with non-contributory invalidity pension or housewives non-contributory invalidity pension)	79	59	42
Passported to disablement condition	25	13	269
Disablement condition satisfied	5	—	16

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the cost of computerising the cervical cancer smear test scheme for the whole of the United Kingdom;

(2) how many and which area health authorities have proposed to install computerised cervical cancer smear test schemes; and how many and in which areas such schemes have been approved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of computerising the cervical cancer smear scheme in the Cheshire area health authority; what representations he has received from the authority to do this; and what replies he has given.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received no representations on this subject from the district health authorities in Cheshire who are responsible for cervical screening and for whom the FPC already operates a manual recall scheme. So far as we are aware, this scheme is working satisfactorily.

It would cost rather over £100,000 to put the female patient registration records of Cheshire family practitioner committee onto a computer suitable for cervical cytology call and recall, not including operating costs. Cheshire FPC is keen to have a computer for patient registration and other activities when funds are available, and has been advised of our overall plans and priorities for installing computers in FPCs.

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many errors have come to light during the last five years which have arisen from the use of a manual cervical cancer smear test scheme; and if any of these occurred in the Cheshire area health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not aware of any such errors. Cervical cytology recall schemes, whether manual or computerised, are designed to invite women who have already been tested to attend for routine cervical cytology tests at regular intervals. The hon. Member may wish to approach the district health authority for information on the system currently operating in Cheshire.

Once any test has been taken, it is essential that proper arrangements are made by the clinician to ensure follow-up of any abnormal smears. The hon. Member may have in mind reported cases of error in these arrangements but they are nothing to do with the arrangement for recall.

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died from cervical cancer in the Cheshire area health authority area in each of the last five years; and how this compares with the United Kingdom average.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is shown in the following table, for the five most recent years for which data are available.

To provide a comparison with the United Kingdom figure a standardised mortality ratio (SMR) is shown. The SMR for the United Kingdom is 100.

*Deaths from cancer of cervix uteri (ICD 180) and Standardised Mortality Ratios based on United Kingdom, 1979-83 Cheshire Area Health Authority

1979	50	137
1980	50	140
1981	49	138
1983	45	129

* Cheshire Area Health Authority up to 1 April 1982; County of Cheshire from 1 April 1982. (The Area Health Authority equated to the County).

Infertility

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to set up an inquiry into the causes, treatment, and treatment provision in the area of infertility as recommended in the Warnock report.

Mr Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to do at present.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department collects information as to the current provision of treatment of infertility.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The statistics we collect do not identify this information.

Quangos

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Group on Hepatitis submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: The Advisory Group on Hepatitis met twice. On the basis of the Group's advice, in December 1984 the Department issued guidance for health care personnel dealing with patients infected with Hepatitis B virus. this is contained in CMO(84)11 and CNO(84)7, copies of which are in the Library.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Committee on Assessment of Laboratory Standards submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: The Advisory Committee on Assessment of Laboratory Standards (ACALS)met three times during the 12 months to 31 March 1985 and submitted wide-ranging advice on all three occasions with the objective of improving the concordance of clinical laboratory results throughout the National Health Service and in the private health care sector. It thus plays an important part in securing accurate and reliable diagnosis of dise.. e. We took action to disseminate or follow up by other appropriate means all the advice received.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given;

(2) on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Committee on the Review of Medicines submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The statutory committees on the Review of Medicines and on Dental and Surgical Materials provide a continuous flow of written advice on general matters and on individual cases concerned with the safety, quality and efficacy of medicinal products and related subjects. The action taken on such matters depends on the particular circumstances but it is exceptional for the advice not be accepted. Information about detailed advice given by the committees is commercially confidential.

The latest available figures cover the 12 months until 31 December 1984. During that period the number of product licence applications referred for advice to the Committee on the Review of Medicines was 108 and to the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials was 100. In addition advice was obtained from the Committee on the Review of Medicines about the revocation on safety grounds of 11 product licences.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Central Advisory Committee on Rural Practice Payments submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On one occasion. As a result, fees for visits paid by general medical practitioners to lighthouses and islands were revised with effect from 1 January 1985.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Joint Group on Performance Indicators submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: The Joint Group on Performance Indicators formally submitted its Report in January 1985. That report gave as its main recommendation that the Department should issue a set of Performance Indicators in 1985 based on the work of the joint group and its working groups. The report also contained twelve detailed recommendations. The Department is now taking action to implement all the recommendations of the joint group; a new package of Performance Indicators will be issued to the Health Service this summer.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Maternity Services Advisory Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: In the 12 months ending 31 March 1985, the Maternity Services Advisory Committee submitted advice on one occasion, in the form of its 3rd and last report "Care of the Mother and Baby", published on 21 February 1985. We distributed over 13,000 copies of this report to the Health Service, and to professional and lay organisations; and have asked health authorities to take its recommendations into account when considering what improvements might be needed to their services in this field. Having completed its work, the committee has now been wound up.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the 12 months to 31 March 1985 the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances met 3 times and considered some 36 products put to it by manufacturers. The committee advised that 11 of these products were either toilet preparations or foods and therefore should not be prescribable at National Health Service expense and that 25 products should be prescribable under the NHS but only for certain clinical conditions. We accepted this advice and informed the medical profession accordingly.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Committee on Dialysis

Equipment submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: The Advisory Committee on Dialysis Equipment held one meeting during the twelve months ending 31 March 1985. At that meeting levels of aluminium and fluoride in the water supply for haemodialysis were discussed which resulted in the publication of a Safety Information Bulletin No. 20, SIB(85)2; Water for Haemodialysis: Aluminium and Fluoride Levels. This Bulletin gives recommendations for minimising exposure of patients undergoing haemodialysis to these substances. The safety information bulletin was issued to health authorities throughout the United Kingdom.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Health Services Human Growth Hormone Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: The Health Services Human Growth Hormone Committee meets quarterly and its minutes are circulated within the Department. The committee's functions are executive rather than advisory and its responsibilities are mainly clinical; in 1984 they considered 248 cases for growth hormone therapy. In 1977 it replaced the Medical Research Council's working party on human growth hormone. Health circular HC(77)21 which announced the change and outlined the committee's remit was placed in the Library. The remit remains unaltered.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation met twice. In addition, there was regular contact between our officials and the Chairman and Members of the committee as the need arose. The committee's advice was taken into account on all issues relating to the Government's policy on immunisation.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Joint Committee on the Medical Aspects of Water Quality submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. John Patten: None. This committee and another committee which had advised on the contamination of air and soil were replaced (in 1984) by the Committee on the Medical Aspects of the Contamination of Air, Soil and Water.

This committee will, amongst other functions, provide advice on questions referred by the Department of the Environment, directly or on behalf of the water industry, on the medical significance of chemicals and physical agents which may be present in drinking water. Any action required as a result of this advice will usually be for that Department or the water industry.

The committee met in November 1984 and February 1985 and is expected to meet four times a year in future. No fresh action has been required as a result of advice given at these meetings other than to seek additional information on questions under review.

Westminster Hospital Cardiac Unit

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take on the decision by the Victoria health authority to close the cardiac surgical unit at Westminster hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are currently considering this proposal in the light of the representations we have received. I shall write to my hon. Friend when a final decision has been reached.

NHS (Management Consultants)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent on management consultants' services in the National Health Service in each year since 1979; and what is the proposed figure for 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Management consultants are commissioned for work in the National Health Service both by health authorities and by our Department. No record of the work commissioned by health authorities is kept centrally and the information cannot be produced without disproportionate cost. Consultancy work commissioned by the Department covers both National Health Service and Departmental applications but separate figures are not kept. Central funding since 1979 was as follows:

1980-81	390,930
1981-82	731,276
1982-83	1,315,588
1983-84	3,622,887
1984-85	*7,600,000

* Estimated.

Proposed expenditure for 1985-86 is estimated at £13·8 million. Separate figures for work commissioned in the National Health Service by our Department cannot be produced without disproportionate cost.

The increase in expenditure in the last two to three years has been influenced substantially by the need to obtain expert technical assistance with the development of advanced on-line computer systems for social security operations.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has regarding the incidence of management consultants employed by the National Health Service seeking to attract National Health Service employees away from the National Health Service and into employment with those consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have such information.

Private Contractors

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the progress being made by Bolton district health authority in inviting tendering by private companies for laundry services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The North Western regional health authority is carrying out a study of its laundry services and when this is completed tendering programmes will be drawn up by the district health authorities, including Bolton.

Benefits (Coventry)

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what number and percentage of those unemployed in the Coventry travel-to-work area have exhausted their right to unemployment benefit.

Mr. Ray Whitney: At November 1983 there were 12,360 unemployment claimants in the area covered by the Coventry unemployment benefit offices, including the office in Leamington, who had exhausted their entitlement to unemployment benefit. This was 38·7 per cent. of the total number of unemployed claimants in that area. Information on the benefit position of unemployed claimants is not available for the travel-to-work area.

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many extra-statutory payments have been made by the Coventry offices of his Department in the latest year; and how much money is involved, giving separate figures for compensation and payment in respect of benefit.

Mr. Whitney: In the year ended 31 March 1985, the Department made two special payments in respect of cases from the Coventry East local office: an extra statutory payment of £32·50 as compensation for delay in payment of a statutory entitlement of £679·65, and an ex-gratia payment of £19·32 in recognition of loss suffered as a result of official misdirection.

Extra-statutory authority was given in a third case to give home responsibilities protection cover during the 1984-85 tax year to safeguard the individual's pension rights; no cash payment was involved.

Orthoptists

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that, because of the increasing work load associated with glaucoma patients health authority staffing of orthoptists in proportion to catchment population should be 1 to 40,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We value highly the work of orthoptists, including the work they do with glaucoma patients. Provision of staff for this work must however be a matter for individual health authorities, based on their knowledge of local circumstances and priorities.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will describe the work done by orthoptists employed by the health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Orthoptists work under the overall direction of consultant ophthalmologists. They are concerned mainly with the diagnosis and non-surgical treatment of patients, most of them children, and with disorder of the function of the eye muscles, particularly squints. They may also work in the diagnosis and treatment of glaucoma and other eye diseases.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list showing, by regional health authorities (a) the number of whole-time equivalent orthoptists employed in each year since 1981 and (b) on the latest available figures, the ratio of whole-time equivalent orthoptists to catchment population.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is as follows. The latest available figures are for 30 September 1983. As there are no centrally defined catchment populations for orthoptists the ratios to resident population have been given.

National Health Service Orthoptists as at 30 September

Community Health Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money was promised to the Association of Community Health Councils in England and Wales for 1983-84 and 1984-85; how much will be made available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A Government grant of £15,000 was offered to the association in respect of 1983-84 and paid in April 1984. A further grant of up to £27,500 was offered to clear the association's projected deficit in 1984-5, subject to a number of conditions, one of which was that if the deficit in 1984-85 proved to be less than £27,500, only the actual amount would be met. The association confirmed their acceptance of the conditions in accepting the grant offer. Payments totalling £21,100, based on monthly statements of receipts and payments provided by the association, have been made.

Our policy continues to be that the association's main source of income should be subscriptions from individual community health councils for whose benefit the association exists and who are best placed to judge the value of the association's work. We have also made it quite clear that we expect the association to manage its financial affairs so as to operate within the income it attracts.

Medical Aid for Poland Fund

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much aid was given in 1984 to the Medical Aid for Poland fund; and how much he expects to be given in 1985 and of what kind;

(2) how much surplus medical equipment and supplies were given to Equipment for Charity Hospitals Overseas in 1984; and how much he expects will be given in 1985.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Private Hospitals (NHS Equipment)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much surplus medical equipment and supplies was given to or disposed of at less than cost price to private hospitals in 1984; and how much he expects will be given in 1985.

Mr. John Patten: We do not have this information centrally.

Tenosynovitis

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ask the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council to consider widening the terms of the prescribed disease tenosynovitis to include carpal tunnel syndrome and other diseases from the class of diseases known as repetitive strain injury.

Mr. Tony Newton: The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council considered repetition strain injuries, including carpal tunnel syndrome, in its report, published in 1981, "Industrial Diseases: a Review of the Schedule and the Question of Individual Proof", (Cmnd. 8393, paragraphs 51 to 55). In 1983 the council studied two of these conditions, epicondylitis of the humerus and rotator cuff syndrome, in more detail. This report was not published but copies are available in the Library. Both reports took the view that there was insufficient evidence to warrant widening the terms of prescription.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish his Department's estimates of the likely cost of compensation payments to the victims of vibration white finger who will be able to claim benefit for the first time from April.

Mr. Newton: The latest estimate places the cost at £188,000 for 1985-86 and £486,000 for 1986-87. These estimates can be only rough approximations due to the lack of comprehensive statistics on workers suffering from the disease and the difficulty of predicting how many of those eligible will actually claim benefit.

Asbestos

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his Department's estimates of the likely cost of compensation payments to the victims of asbestos who will be able to claim benefit for the first time from April.

Mr. Newton: The latest estimate places the cost at £75,000 for 1985-86 and £170,000 for 1986-87. These estimates can be only rough approximations due to the lack of comprehensive statistics on workers suffering from the diseases and the difficulty of predicting how many of those eligible will actually claim benefit.

Sympathetic Hearing Scheme

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much money has been allocated by his Department to the sympathetic hearing scheme for deaf people since it was launched by his predecessor; and how much is likely to be paid in the future;

(2) what is his assessment of the value of the sympathetic hearing scheme for deaf people; if he intends to continue to support it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Panel of Four Principal National Organisations representing deaf people and their interests has indicated to us that the sympathetic hearing scheme has been a great success. The Department has paid grants totalling £235,000 towards the support of the scheme and we are in touch with the Panel of Four about its future financing.

Nursing and Residential Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he intends to make of the extent to which his proposal to limit payments for elderly people in nursing homes to £138·60 a week will be adequate to cover the additional costs of nursing care over residential care.

Mr. Newton: We have no firm evidence at present that the differential between the supplementary benefit board and lodging limit for nursing homes and that for residential homes is inadequate, but we have accepted the recommendation of the Social Security Advisory Committee that this issue merits further research. We are arranging for this to be undertaken, and will review the position when fuller information is available.

Deaf Persons (Interpreters)

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute a register of qualified interpreters in sign language for the deaf.

Mr. Newton: The Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People, which is grant aided by this Department, maintains such a register.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of mortgage payers on supplementary benefit and the amount involved in the past year in meeting the interest payments of those unemployed.

Mr. Whitney: There are no figures yet available for 1984. The latest information on the number of claimants in Great Britain receiving supplementary benefit housing addition payments for mortgage interest and the estimated cost of meeting the interest payments of those supplementary benefit claimants who are unemployed is as follows:

Total number of supplementary beneficiaries in receipt of mortgage interest	235,000	250,000
Number of those who are unemployed	140,000	142,000
Average weekly amount of mortgage interest in unemployed cases	£16.92	†
Estimated annual cost of meeting mortgage interest in unemployed cases	£123,000,000	†

* (estimate)
† Not yet available

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the estimated cost of meeting the entitlement to supplementary benefit of full-time students in advanced education (a) for the short Easter and Christmas vacations and (b) for the long vacations;

(2) what is the estimated cost of meeting the entitlement of full-time students in advanced education (a) in respect of certificated housing benefit and (b) in respect of standard housing benefit.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the registered nursing homes with operating theatres in England on 31 December 1983 giving in each case the number of beds and the health district and region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 21 January 1985 c. 327]: The available information is given in the table.

Private Hospitals, Homes and Clinics

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for 31 December 1983 and for each health district, the total number of beds in private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics registered under section 3 of the Nursing Homes Act 1975 which contain operating theatres, the total number of state registered nurses working in those institutions and the appropriate whole-time equivalent figure and the total number of all nursing staff working in those institutions and the appropriate whole-time equivalent figure;

(2) if he will give for 31 December 1983 and for each health district, the total number of beds in private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics registered under section 3 of the Nursing Homes Act 1975, the total number of state registered nurses working in those institutions, and the appropriate whole time equivalent figure, and the total number of all nursing staff working in those institutions and the appropriate whole time equivalent figure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: [pursuant to his reply, 21 January 1985, c. 327]: The available information is given in the table.

Crown Suppliers (Services)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what, pursuant to the reply of 28 March, was the value of the services provided by the Crown Suppliers to each of the London boroughs listed in that answer.

Sir George Young: The value of the services provided by the Crown Suppliers to each of the London boroughs listed in answer to the hon. Member's question of Thursday 28 March 1985 is as follows:

	1979-80 £	1980-81 £	1981-82 £	1982-83 £	1983-84 £	1984-85 £

As in the reply to the hon. Members question on 28 March at col. 336, the totals include the value of services provided to the Greater London council, some of which in turn were re-supplied to some London boroughs.

Housing Associations

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure regular reviews of the price limits and procedures for the home-ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction announced changes to the home-ownership scheme for charitable tenants on 1 April. The limits will be reviewed annually. The procedures are kept under constant review with the Housing Corporation.

Quangos

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Committee on the Management of Privately Owned Blocks of Flats submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Gow: None. The committee to which my hon. Friend refers was appointed last year under the chairmanship of Mr. Edward Nugee, QC to examine a wide range of problems associated with the management of privately owned blocks of flats and to make recommendations. It is expected to report later this year.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Inland Waterways Authority Advisory Council submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Gow: Twice. On one occasion we made consequent drafting changes to the proposed objectives of the British Waterways Board and, on the other a report on BWB marina policies was referred to the BWB for further consideration. But IWAAC also submitted other advice and representations direct to BWB as it is empowered to do under section 110(2) of the Transport Act 1968.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Property Advisory Group submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Property Advisory Group has met on 22 occasions in the past 12 months and has provided advice on a variety of topics relevant to my Department's current work.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he makes available for the formation of enterprise agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My Department's regional offices have taken an active part in encouraging the private sector and local authorities to establish local enterprise agencies and, where appropriate, financial support has been provided through the urban programme. Help, advice, and support for local enterprise agencies is also given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Planning (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications in Greater London over each of the last five years were called in and decided by his Department.

Mr. Macfarlane: The information is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Applications called in (includes both Council and private proposals)	22	20	12	16	7
Decisions issued	20	10	10	13	13
Applications withdrawn	9	5	4	5	0

Home Improvements

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 1 April, Official Report, column 439, when he now expects the consultation document on the review of home improvement policy to be published.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend intends to issue the consultation document shortly.

Ministers' Offices (Furniture)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will itemise the furniture purchased to the sums of £14,044 for Ministers' offices in his Department during 1983-84 and of £8,975 during 1984-85.

Sir George Young: The information is as follows:

Items of furniture	Year purchased 1983-84	1984-85
Desk	√	√
Desk chair	—	√
Committee chairs	13	9
Storage units	—	√
Nest of tables	√	—
2 small tables	—	√
Enlargement of committee table	√	—
Desk set	√	—
Glassware	√	—
3 three piece suites	2	1
4 easy chairs	√	—
Hat and coat stand	—	√
Cleaning and renovation of furniture	√	√
Locks	√	—
Lamps	—	√
Carpets	√	√
Curtains	√	√

The figures quoted by the hon. Member include the costs of cleaning and renovating some of the furniture and the Crown Suppliers on-costs.

Historic Building and Monuments Commission

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many investigations have been carried out by management consultants at the request of the Historic Building and Monuments Commission for England since it was established; and what has been the cost in each case.

Mr. Macfarlane: I understand there have been three studies, the costs of which are as follows:

Design of temporary accounting system	12,000
Study of commission's organisation and structure	57,000
Design of new accounting system	17,200

Housing Defects

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what types of repairs of housing defects can be funded from expenditure exempt from the new limit on the use of capital receipts by local authorities.

Sir George Young: There are no exemptions from the revised prescribed proportions of capital receipts set out in the Local Government (Prescribed Expenditure)

(Amendment) Regulations 1985. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 13 March 1985 that he was prepared to consider requests for additional capital allocations for 1985-86 from local authorities unable to meet their statutory obligations under the Housing Defects Act 1984. Authorities have been invited to submit their bids by 31 May 1985.

Rate-Capping (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the amount spent on anti-rate capping propaganda by Leicester city council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I do not have precise information; but Leicester has clearly been wasting considerable sums of its ratepayers money on anti-rate capping propaganda, and I understand that the council's policy and resources committee has reported that in this new financial year £150,000 could conceivably be spent on a rate limitation publicity campaign.

Radioactive Waste

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what bodies he is presently consulting in preparing his assessment of disposal options in respect of radioactive waste which he intends to publish in the summer.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department is consulting the Department of Health and Social Security, and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the National Radiological Protection Board, the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive, the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, the Scottish Development Department and the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. We have undertaken to keep the Trades Union Congress informed about progress, and to hold discussions with it at an appropriate stage. At the suggestion of the TUC, we have also invited Professor Holliday and the other members of the team which reviewed sea disposal in the Atlantic to comment on the plans for the study, and in due course on the draft results. To provide time for the various consultations, the study will now take longer than originally envisaged, but should be completed by the end of the year.

West Midlands Enterprise Board

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the effect of the proposed abolition of the West Midlands county council on the spending power of the West Midlands enterprise board of funds accumulated from the finances provided by the private investors.

Mr. Waldegrave: The status of the West Midlands enterprise board as a private company will be unaffected by the proposed abolition of the West Midlands county council and it will be for the enterprise board itself to ensure that it has the necessary funding to continue as a going concern.

Local Government Reform

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the £15,000 sum which he announced recently would require his consent for contracts arranged by the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils will apply also to the bodies which will replace them when they are finally abolished.

Sir George Young: No.

Palace of Westminster (Interior Cleaning)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for how long the Exclusive Cleaning and Maintenance Company has had a contract for cleaning the Palace of Westminster; how often the contract is subject to renewal; how many people it employs in the Palace; and whether it is responsible for cleaning in all parts of the Palace.

Sir George Young: The company has had a contract for cleaning parts of the Palace of Westminster and other parliamentary buildings since 19 January 1979. The original contract, for three years, was extended to 8 October 1982 to cover a rationalisation of the work. The current contract expires in October 1985, and competitive tenders for a new three-year contract will be invited shortly. The company is only responsible for cleaning those public parts of the buildings which are not cleaned by staff of the House of Lords, House of Commons or the Property Services Agency. The number of staff employed to fulfil the terms of the contract is a matter for the company.

Society of Engineers Incorporated

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 1 April, column 439, why the Society of Engineers Incorporated is not included in the list of bodies designated for the purposes of approved inspectors for checking and carrying out site supervision under section 49 of the Building Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In September 1984 the Department consulted a number of professional institutions, including the Society of Engineers Incorporated on proposals to designate the eight bodies listed in the answer which I gave on 1 April. The society did not respond and my right hon. Friend does not intend at present to designate other bodies.

Departmental Headquarters

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the consultants' report on the remedial works required to his Department's headquarters building in Marsham street, referred to in his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 12, will be published when available.

Sir George Young: The report will be a detailed technical document. I shall publish a summary of its principal findings and recommendations, with the Department's views.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the extent and nature of asbestos materials used in the construction and fittings of his Department's headquarters building in Marsham street; if it is considered that these materials constitute a hazard to health; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Asbestos-containing materials have been used principally for thermal insulation on heating and hot water pipework located in service ducts and plant rooms where they do not constitute a hazard to health. As a matter of prudence, these insulating materials will be replaced with an asbestos-free alternative, and a programme of work on this will commence in the summer. Appropriate safety precautions will be taken during the removal operation.

Other asbestos-containing materials present in the building are well sealed and not considered to constitute a hazard to health.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the defects in his Department's headquarters building first came to attention; and if any action is proposed in respect of the builders or architects.

Sir George Young: The first isolated incident of spalling concrete was noted in 1980, with further cases in 1982. Repairs were undertaken and investigations to discover the cause were set in hand. Consideration of possible action in respect of other parties must await the outcome of the consultants' investigations, referred to in my answer of 25 March at column 12.

System-built Tower Blocks

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the final report and recommendations from the Building Research Establishment concerning safety in system-built tower blocks; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Last October my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction announced that the Building Research Establishment was to carry out an urgent investigation of large panel systems of construction. The main conclusions and recommendations of the first stage of this investigation, which relate to the structure of Ronan Point and other Taylor Woodrow Anglian buildings, were reported in the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 19 February last at columns 409-410. A full report of this first stage of the investigation should be published within the next month. The findings of further studies will be published as soon as they become available.

Water Reserves (North West)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of water reserves are held by the North West water authority; and how this compares with last year.

Mr. Macfarlane: Detailed records are not held centrally and up-to-date information should be sought from the water authority. However, I understand that surface water stocks in the major reservoirs range upwards from 80 per cent. of capacity and are holding up well as a result of the recent spell of wet weather. Ground water levels are satisfactory for the time of year.

The water authority considers that the position is rather better than in April 1984.

Small Shops

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from small shopkeepers about the effect on traditional high streets in rural areas of the development of hypermarkets and superstores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: I receive representations from time to time from individual small shopkeepers or their representative bodies about hypermarkets and superstores; and I give them careful consideration.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what machinery is available for checking on commitments to future action made by applicants at public inquiries, after planning permission has been granted and development taken place.

Mr. Macfarlane: The enforcement of any planning obligations is a matter for the local planning authority; in the case of a condition imposed on a planning permission by means of the procedures set out in part V of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, and in the case of an agreement under section 52 of that Act by application to the courts. I am satisfied that these powers are adequate. If my hon. Friend is concerned about a particular case I would be glad to look into it if he would care to write to me.

Church House (Car Park)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many companies tendered to provide security services at the Church House parliamentary car park; and why the contract was awarded to an American company.

Sir George Young: Five tenders were received. The lowest tender, from Wackenhut (UK) Limited, was accepted in line with normal practice.

Security Officers

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of security officers previously employed by his Department who have been replaced by private agencies in the last five years, together with a list of the agencies now used and the number of guards provided by each.

Sir George Young: The information is as follows:

Security staff replaced by private agencies*	Agencies now used	Number of guards provided by each agency
35	Securiguard Ltd.	18
	Bewes Security Services Ltd.	2
	Centuryan Security Ltd.	1
	Sunlight Security Services Ltd.	5
	Wackenhut (UK) Ltd.	5
		31

*The Department does not employ the grade of Security Officers. The staff replaced have been messengers.

Textile Industry

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the criteria used in determining which areas shall receive allocations under the European regional development fund non-quota textile areas scheme.

Sir George Young: The criteria are set out in the regulation governing the non-quota textile measures (EEC No. 219/84). They are:

(a) A minimum number of jobs in the textile and clothing industry;
(b) Industrial employment dependent in large measure on textiles and clothing;
(c) Major job losses in the industry in recent years;
(d) The social and economic situation in the region assessed on the basis of the per capita gross domestic product and structural unemployment;
(e) Eligibility for a national regional-aid scheme.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he takes in determining allocations under the European regional development fund non-quota textile measures scheme of recent trends in the size of the textile industry in Lancashire and in the numbers of people employed.

Sir George Young: The allocation of non-quota ERDF funds under the textile measure followed criteria used in the European Commission's allocations between member states and was agreed by them. It took account of (i) the numbers of jobs lost in the textile and clothing industry, (ii) the dependency of employment upon textiles and (iii) unemployment.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report allocations approved to date for each local authority under the European regional development fund non-quota textile measures scheme.

Sir George Young: The Department has not yet made any allocations of non-quota ERDF grant but expects to do so shortly.

Civil Servants (Extra-departmental Work)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made to log the work of civil servants undertaken outside his Department.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 760]: Staff require Departmental permission for outside activities which do not meet conditions relating to conflict of interests etc. These are set down in the Departmental staff rules and are, in turn, derived from the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code. All applications (and enquiries in cases where there are doubts) are dealt with centrally and are recorded.

Royal Parks Constabulary

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what increase there has been in the last decade in the use of motor vehicles by police and other services in the royal parks; and if he will require it to be kept to a minimum for the avoidance of pollution.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his answer, 4 April 1985, c. 760]: 74 motor vehicles are in use by the Royal Parks constabulary and other services in the royal parks in 1985, compared with 79 in 1976.

These numbers exclude vehicles used by the Metropolitan police who are responsible for policing Hyde Park. In addition, 97 items of road registered operational plant, tractors etc. are now used in the royal parks compared with 117 in 1975.

Greater London Council

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why requests for consents from the Greater London council for the provision of vehicle hire, services and printing were refused; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 4 April 1985, c. 760]: No such requests have been refused. Consent to an application under section 9 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 for a contract for vehicle hire was given on 29 March. Applications for consent to contracts for services and printing contained in an application dated 28 March are being considered.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites referred to in paragraph 5.2.1 of the London Docklands Development Corporation 5-year operational plan published in January, that the corporation has identified for possible acquisition, and identify the sites that are regarded by the corporation as high priority sites.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 4 April 1985, c. 761]: No. Potential acquisitions must always be discussed with the owners before a public statement can be made.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the cost of acquisition, (b) infrastructure and reclamation costs and (c) the disposal price of each site listed separately, so far disposed of by the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 4 April 1985, c. 761]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 20 February 1985 at column 488, which gives aggregate totals to 31 March 1984, the latest date for which figures are available.

Infrastructure and reclamation costs in docklands vary greatly depending on ground conditions but generally range between £100,000 and £300,000 per acre. Sales prices for housing land are subject to similar variations and prices ranging from £30,000 to about £650,000 per acre have been offered by the market since the Corporation was established. The selling price of other land has ranged from about £100,000 to £500,000 per acre depending on size, location and building conditions imposed.

The site by site breakdown that the hon. Gentleman requests would breach commercial confidentiality and could prejudice existing and future negotiations by the LDDC for both the purchase and disposal of land.

ENERGY

Nuclear Fuel (Reprocessing)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the arrangements for the disposal of plutonium from spent nuclear fuel imported from Japan; and if there are similar arrangements for all countries which have agreed to send spent nuclear fuel to the United Kingdom for reprocessing.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the Hon. Member to my reply of 1 April, at column 465. Plutonium from spent fuel reprocessed in the United Kingdom is returned to its country of origin or to any other destination only on receipt of assurances covering peaceful use, application of safeguards, physical protection and controls on retransfer.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the United Kingdom agreement with France on joint development of reprocessing facilities contains any safeguards to ensure that the plutonium produced is not used for military purposes.

Mr. Goodlad: In January 1984 the United Kingdom concluded with France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Belgium, an inter-governmental memorandum of understanding on co-operation in the field of fast reactors. Clause 5 explicitly states that the collaboration is directed to the peaceful development of nuclear energy.

Within this framework, the UKAEA and BNFL and their French counterparts (the CEA and COGEMA) signed, in March 1984, a memorandum of understanding setting out the general principles of co-operation in the field of fast reactor fuel reprocessing, but no agreement has been concluded relating to any specific project for the joint development of associated reprocessing facilities.

Nuclear Weapons (Fast Breeder Reactor)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the United Kingdom fast breeder reactor has any role in relation to the United Kingdom nuclear weapons programme.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Domestic Energy Supplies

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many copies of "Paying Electricity and Gas Bills", a code of practice for domestic customers, have been printed; how they were distributed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have asked the chairmen of the British Gas Corporation and the Electricity Council to provide the information direct to the hon. Member.

Sizewell Reactor

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce a decision on the proposed siting of a Central Electricity Generating Board reactor at Sizewell.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall announce my decision when I have received the inspector's report and had time to consider it.

Combined Heat and Power (Sheffield)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of his announcement that Sheffield will not be among the selected cities for Government financial assistance in respect of combined heat and power, he will support the Sheffield project in any further applications for financial assistance under the European Economic Community's energy saving projects.

Mr. David Hunt: I am happy to give the hon. Member the assurance he seeks. The United Kingdom delegate to the advisory committee for the European Community demonstration scheme, who is an official of my Department, will support a technically and economically sound proposal from the Sheffield CHP consortium provided that there is substantial private sector participation. Preliminary discussions with my officials on the Sheffield consortium's EEC application have already taken place.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish (Mortality Research)

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what investigations have been conducted by his Department, or on its behalf, by universities or other research institutions into the mortality of any species of fish in United Kingdom waters; and what was the annual cost of such research to his Department for each year from 1975 to 1984 inclusive.

Mrs. Fenner: Whilst there are no projects currently supported by MAFF specifically relating to mortality of fish, estimates of both natural and fishing mortality are included in any stock assessment exercises carried out for management purposes. The full economic cost of these studies has been:

1976-77	*
1977-78	992,800
1978-79	1,166,600
1979-80	1,536,100
1980-81	2,076,700
1981-82	2,264,000
1982-83	2,556,100
1983-84	3,154,600
1984-85†	3,159,800

* Not available in comparable form.
† Estimate.

Pesticides

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it is the practice of his Department to inquire whether pesticides imported into the United Kingdom are prohibited from being used in the exporting country.

Mrs. Fenner: It is not the practice of my Department to base decisions on clearance for the marketing of pesticides in this country on the decisions of other countries. Applicants for clearance are required to submit data on many facets of pesticide safety, as applicable to United Kingdom use; these requirements are set out in the pesticides safety precautions scheme (PSPS) which is available in the Library of the House. Additionally, the scientific assessors of the nine Government Departments and agencies involved in the PSPS have contacts throughout the world and take account of all the scientific evidence on the safety of pesticides available to them.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will describe the process of testing a new pesticide for approval by the advisory committee on pesticides; and if he will describe what arrangements are made to monitor the effects of commercial use after approval.

Mrs. Fenner: There are many detailed tests covering various aspects of pesticide safety which must be undertaken in support of a notification for clearance considered by the advisory committee on pesticides. These are set out in the pesticides safety precautions scheme, which is available in the Library of the House.

Arrangements made to monitor the effects of commercial use include surveys on usage patterns and the continuous monitoring of both home-produced and imported food for residues of pesticides. In addition, reported incidents of suspected poisoning of people, where the commercial use of pesticides may have been involved, are investigated by the Health and Safety Executive, and incidents involving wildlife and other animals are investigated by the wildlife incident investigation scheme.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will describe the typical number and species of animals used as subjects in testing a new pesticide in tests approved by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Mrs. Fenner: Pesticides notified under the pesticides safety precautions scheme and considered by the advisory committee on pesticides are subject to a variety of tests, some of which require the use of live animals, mainly rats. Full details of all test requirements are in the scheme book, a copy of which is held in the Library of the House. The tests are subject to continual review and the requirement to use live animals kept to a minimum consistent with the thorough safety screening of pesticides.

Sugar Prices

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received representations about the price of sugar from commercial beekeepers consequent on United Kingdom membership of the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I have received a number of representations from professional and amateur beekeepers about the price of sugar for feeding to bees.

Under a three-year European Community programme of aid for beekeepers, aid was payable through recognised associations of beekeepers which could be used for the purchase of feeding sugar or for more general projects of benefit to the longer term future of beekeeping. Since the scheme ended last year, European Community resources have been concentrated on further research into bee diseases. The Government support this form of assistance which is of more benefit to beekeeping as a whole than the provision of sugar at concessionary prices to individual beekeepers.

Intervention Beef (Stores)

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether a standard rate is paid to owners of privately owned stores for holding stocks of beef in intervention.

Mr. MacGregor: Information on storage rates for intervention beef is not given on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Warbecide

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice is given by his Department about the optimum quantity of warbecide to be applied to cattle when treated in accordance with the regulations.

Mrs. Fenner: Warble fly treatments are licensed under the Medicines Act 1968, and licences include detailed dosage instructions which are shown on product labels. The Warble Fly (England and Wales) Order 1982 requires cattle to be treated in accordance with these instructions.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy towards amendment of the London dumping convention to regulate the control of under-seabed emplacement of radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The emplacement of radioactive waste beneath the seabed was discussed at the eighth consultative meeting of the London dumping convention in February 1984. It was generally agreed that the convention was the appropriate international forum in which to address the question, but no conclusion was reached on whether the convention applied to such emplacement. It was agreed that no such disposal should take place until it had been shown to be both technically feasible and environmentally acceptable and a regulatory mechanism had been elaborated under the convention. However, investigatory work, without the use of radioactive waste, was not ruled out. The United Kingdom Government are party to these decisions.

Abbatoirs

Mr. Hanley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will take steps to ensure that properly designed unloading bays are provided in new and existing abbatoirs;

(2) whether he will consider introducing measures to regulate the space requirements for animals held overnight in abattoirs.

Mrs. Fenner: These matters are the subject of recommendations by the Farm Animal Welfare Council in its report on the welfare of livestock at the time of slaughter. The Government are considering the council's recommendations.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hanley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will designate an officer within his Department with special responsibility for the welfare of animals at the time of slaughter.

Mrs. Fenner: Certain officers in the Ministry's veterinary service and animal health group already have responsibilities for this subject.

Outgoers' Scheme

Mr. Wainwright asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, of those milk producers to whom he wrote on 25 March offering participation in the outgoers' scheme by ceasing all production in mid-April, what proportion joined the scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: Of the 125 producers who were invited to join the scheme on 25 March, 40 have now accepted—a take-up rate of 32 per cent. Five more producers also wish to become outgoers but are still awaiting either landlord's consent or final professional advice. The final acceptance rate could therefore be as high as 36 per cent.

Quangos

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Agricultural Economics Technical Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 15 April 1985, c. 24]: The Agricultural Economics Technical Committee provides advice annually on the collection of data within the farm management survey in England and farm enterprise studies for which my Department is responsible. It met once during the 12 months to 31 March 1985. Following this, officials within my Department commissioned work from eight academic departments of agricultural economics to collect information on farm incomes for 1984-85 and carry out selected farm enterprise studies.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Hill Farming Advisory Committee for England, Wales and Northern Ireland submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 15 April 1985, c. 24]: The Hill Farming Advisory Committee for England, Wales and Northern Ireland met twice in the 12 months to 31 March. On both occasions the committee commented and advised on a wide range of subjects affecting the hills and uplands. Its views have been taken fully into account and have proved valuable in the formulation of the Government's policies towards the less favoured areas.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answers of 7 December 1984, Official Report, column 295, and 19 December 1984, Official Report, column 201 onwards, if he will provide the latest available figures for the quantities of produce stored in European Economic Community foodstores in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 26]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 14 January at column 30. The note referred to in that reply was updated on 15 April, and I am sending a copy.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current total estimated cost of remedying all the deficiencies in the housing stock as defined by the English House Condition Survey 1981.

Sir George Young: In "Housing Survey Report No. 13" on the 1981 English House Condition Survey, it was estimated that the total cost of remedying every single defect in the national housing stock would be of the order of £30 billion (1981 prices). Information is not available on the total cost now.

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total estimated expenditure on improvement-repair work on houses for each of the past 10 years in the private sector and public sectors, respectively.

Sir George Young: Information in the form requested is not available for the private sector stock. However the English House Condition Survey in 1981 indicated that expenditure by households (including grants) was some £6 billion in 1981.

The information available on expenditure on local authority, new town and housing association stock respectively up to 1983-84 is as follows:

£ million

	*Local Authority	New Towns†	Registered Housing Associations‡
1974-75	582·0	9·0	80·0
1975-76	626·5	11·4	102·0

Local Authorities (Political Publicity Campaigns)

Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government propose to submit evidence to the committee of inquiry into local authority business on local authorities' involvement in political publicity campaigns.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have today placed in the Library copies of the submission to the Widdicome inquiry made jointly by my Department, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office on the use of the local authorities' discretionary powers to engage in political campaigning and publicity at public expense.

The Departments' evidence demonstrates that in recent years there has been a dramatic escalation in the use by local authorities of public funds to publish material and carry out publicity campaigns of a political nature. There is increasing public concern and resentment at this development, which many believe to be both undesirable and contrary to the spirit of local government in this country. The Government fully share this concern, particularly where it results in the involvement of local authority staff in political campaigning and the intrusion of political advertising in every corner of public life.

Local Government (Staff)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in descending order for each London borough the number of local authority employees per 100 inhabitants allowing for the Inner London education authority and the Greater London council.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 1 April 1985, c. 438-39]: The information is as follows:

Staff Per Hundred Population

Inner London Boroughs (including GLC and ILEA)

Borough	Staff
Camden	6·17
Hackney	5·85
Lambeth	5·84
Islington	5·58
Lewisham	5·29
Greenwich	5·07
Tower Hamlets	4·98
Westminster	4·73
Hammersmith	4·59
Kensington & Chelsea	3·86
Wandsworth	3·77

Information is not available for Southwark.

Staff Per Hundred Population

Outer London Boroughs (including GLC)

Borough	Staff
Haringey	6·76
Newham	6·37
Brent	5·50
Waltham Forest	5·44
Barking and Dagenham	5·32
Kingston-upon-Thames	5·19
Hounslow	4·86
Hillingdon	4·79
Ealing	4·41
Harrow	4·34
Havering	4·28
Bexley	4·26
Barnet	4·13
Enfield	4·06
Croydon	3·99
Redbridge	3·89
Bromley	3·68
Richmond-upon-Thames	3·67
Sutton	3·49
Merton	3·17

Notes to Tables:

1. The figures relate to total number of employees (full-time and part-time).
2. Employees of GLC and ILEA have been distributed to the appropriate boroughs pro rata to the population in each borough, and added to the number of employees in each borough.

Conduct of Local Authority Business (Inquiry)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now able to make a statement on the membership of the inquiry into the conduct of local authority business, the establishment of which he announced on 6 February.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1985, c. 634]: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I propose to appoint one further member to the committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business:

Mrs Diana Eccles, vice-chairman, National Council for Voluntary Organisations, who lives in Yorkshire.

Royal Parks Constabulary

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses are available to the Royal Parks constabulary.

Mr. MacFarlane [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 760]: Twelve houses are currently occupied by serving members of the Royal Parks constabulary, and eight by former members of the constabulary or their widows.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Spain

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if agreement on Spanish membership of the European Community as led to that country's agreement to cease paying export subsidies on steel.

Mr. Rifkind: As I told the House on 19 December 1984, at columns 193-94, Spain has undertaken to phase out all state aids, including export subsidies, to its steel industry in the three years following accession.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the United Nations Security Council resolutions still extant and operating which call for a ceasefire in the war between Iran and Iraq, indicating in each case how the United Kingdom representative voted.

Mr. Luce: Four United Nations Security Council resolutions have called for a ceasefire in the conflict between Iran and Iraq: Numbers 479 of 28 September 1980; 514 of 12 July 1982; 522 of 4 October and 540 of 31 October 1983. In addition, resolution 552 of 1 June 1984 called for a cessation of attacks on shipping. the United Kingdom voted for all these resolutions, which are still operative.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have called for an arms embargo in respect of the belligerent powers in the Gulf war, by promoting a resolution to that effect in the Security Council of the United Nations Organisation; and whether he will make a statement on his policy in this matter.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom is impartial in the Gulf conflict and supplies no items of defence equipment to either side which might significantly prolong or exacerbate the conflict. We do not believe an arms embargo would be an effective method of ending this conflict, although we would welcome it if other countries followed our own very restrictive policy; national defence sales policies remain a matter for the individual countries concerned.

Anglo-Irish Encounter Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials from his Department have attended conferences organised by the Anglo-Irish Encounter Group; and if he will give the sections of his Department from which they came.

Mr. Renton: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has been represented at each of the three encounter group conferences to date by the head of the Republic of Ireland Department.

Nicaragua and El Salvador (Elections)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria regarding the degree of electoral choice available in (a) Nicaragua and (b) El Salvador upon which Her Majesty's Government based their decisions on whether or not to send observers to oversee the recent elections in those countries.

Mr. Rifkind: We expected voters in Nicaragua and El Salvador to be offered a genuine political choice in the elections and that the political parties in those countries should have had equal freedom to campaign. In El Salvador, both these criteria were met, but in Nicaragua, intimidation and physical harassment led the main opposition group to withdraw from the elections.

Warsaw Pact Countries (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Warsaw pact countries.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I visited East Berlin and the German Democratic Republic from 8 to 10 April, Czechoslovakia from 10 to 11 April and Poland from 11 to 13 April.

In addition to my official talks with the Foreign Ministers of the three countries, I called on the Presidents and Prime Ministers and other members of the leaderships. I and members of my delegation also made a point in each country of meeting a range of non-governmental figures, including representatives of the Church.

On this tour, as during my visits to Romania and Bulgaria in February, I had a number of aims: to broaden the dialogue with Eastern Europe; to try to improve East-West relations; to demonstrate our concern for human rights and contacts between peoples; and to develop bilateral relations and promote trade.

The central question in my discussions was the East-West relationship. There were inevitable differences of view, but the vital importance of the Geneva talks reaching a successful conclusion was common ground. I reminded my hosts of the defensive nature of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation alliance; and left them in no doubt of the sincerity of our search for security at a lower level of armaments through negotiation and genuinely balanced and verifiable agreements.

I was also able to make plain the sincerity and strength of British concern about human rights throughout Europe. I pointed out that the credibility of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe process was undermined if elementary freedoms were not respected.

I had full and detailed discussions about bilateral relations. Trade has an important role to play.

I am grateful to my hosts for the hospitality shown in all these countries; and for the friendly and businesslike atmosphere of the talks. The visit was useful and worth while. It broadened my own knowledge and understanding. I believe that it also led to a better perception of Western positions on the other side.

Malaysia

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Malaysia.

Mr. Luce: Britain enjoys good relations with Malaysia which have been strengthened by the recent visit by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and her discussions wth the Malaysian Prime Minister.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Encounter Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officials from his Department have attended conferences organised by the Anglo-Irish Encounter Group; and if he will indicate the sections of his Department from which they came.

Mr. Hurd: Ten officials from the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments have attended conferences organised by Encounter. Those from the Northern Ireland Departments represented the Departments of Agriculture, Economic Development and Education, the Industrial Development Board and the Public Records Office.

PRIME MINISTER

"The Right to Know"

Q22. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will acquire for the Library of No. 10 Downing Street a copy of "The Right to Know" by Clive Ponting, Sphere Books.

The Prime Minister: No.

South Africa

Q27. Mr. John Fraser asked the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the President of South Africa to discuss recent events in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 April.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 16 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I will be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to attend a state banquet in honour of President Banda.

Anglo-Irish Encounter Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Prime Minister how many officials from the Cabinet Office have attended conferences organised by the Anglo-Irish Encounter Group; and if she will give the sections of the Cabinet Office from which they came.

The Prime Minister: The Anglo-Irish Encounter Group is a non-governmental organisation. No officials from the Cabinet Office have attended its conference.

Asian Visit

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to south-east Asia.

The Prime Minister: I visited Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and Sri Lanka and made brief stops in Brunei, India and Saudi Arabia. I had most useful conversations with the Heads of Government of each of the countries I visited.

In my talks with Dr. Mahathir of Malaysia we were able to settle the issue of a fifth frequency for the Malaysian Airline System which has been an obstacle in our relations.

My talks with Mr. Lee Kuan Yew in Singapore ranged widely over international issues. As always, it was of the greatest interest to hear his views.

My visit to Indonesia was the first by a British Prime Minister and enabled me to see at first hand the remarkable development of this large and important country.

I was very struck by the rapid and exciting economic growth of the south-east Asian countries which I visited. I am certain that there are good opportunities for co-operation and trade between them and Britain which it was my purpose to promote.

In Sri Lanka I was able, with President Jayewardene, to commission the Victoria dam, the largest single British aid project in any country. It will bring material benefits to many of Sri Lankan citizens and is also a mark of the British people's concern for the economic well-being and progress of the developing countries. I was also able to discuss with the Sri Lankan Government the communal conflict. I agreed with President Jayewardene that terrorism must not be allowed to succeed, but that efforts should be made to achieve a political solution by consultation and reconciliation with those members of the Tamil community who are prepared to pursue their objectives peacefully.

In India, I was able to continue the exchanges which I have already had with the Indian Prime Minister, Mr. Rajiv Gandhi. I expressed to him directly my concern at the activities of the small number of extremists among the Sikh community in Britain and the Government's willingness to do everything within our powers to prevent Britain being used as a base for incitement or support of intercommunal tension in India.

In Saudi Arabia, I was able to hear directly from his Majesty King Fahd his views on developments and problems in the middle east and other matters.

All the countries I visited have important links with Britain, either through trade or as members of the Commonwealth. They include some of the fastest growing countries of the world, both economically and in terms of their political significance. I have no doubt that my tour deepened Britain's relations with them and will have helped to create new opportunities for British trade.

EC (Budgetary Contributions)

Mr. Spearing asked the Prime Minister if she will set out in the Official Report the calculations giving rise to her estimate on 2 April, Official Report, column 1063, that the United Kingdom's contribution to integrated Mediterranean programmes will be £10 million a year.

The Prime Minister: The amount of additional funds agreed for integrated Mediterranean programmes was 1·6 billion ecu—about £960 million—over seven years. As a result of the Fontainebleau agreement, the United Kingdom's net contribution to this will be 7 to 7·2 per cent. The total United Kingdom contribution will therefore be around £69 million spread over seven years, or less than £10 million per annum.

Council of Europe

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Prime Minister if she will announce the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have appointed 18 delegates from the Parliament of the United Kingdom. The delegation this year will consist of 12 members of the Conservative party, five members of the Labour party and one member of the Liberal party. I have also appointed a number of substitute delegates.

The appointments of representatives and substitutes have been made on the basis of nominations by the leaders of those parties concerned.

The same delegation will be representing the United Kingdom Parliament at the Assembly of Western European Union.

Representatives from the Government Benches will be:

The right hon. Member for Torbay (Sir Frederic Bennett); who will act as leader.

The hon. Members for
Hampstead and Highgate (Sir Geoffrey Finsberg)
Cambridge, South-West (Sir Anthony Grant)
Norfolk, South-West (Sir Paul Hawkins)
Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill)
Twickenham (Mr. Jessel)
Edgbaston (Mrs. Knight)

Hallam (Sir John Osborn)
Harrow, West (Sir John Page)
Warwick and Leamington (Sir Dudley Smith)
Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) and the Lord Reay

Representatives from the Labour party will be:

The hon. Members for Tooting (Mr. Cox)
Wentworth (Mr Hardy)
Makerfield (Mr. McGuire)
East Kilbride (Dr. Miller) and the Lord Hughes

The representative from the Liberal party will be:

The hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Mr. Johnston)

The following substitutes have been appointed to act as necessary on behalf of the delegates:

From the Government Benches:

The hon. Members for
Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson)
Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie)
Epping Forest (Sir John Biggs-Davison)
Northampton, South (Mr. Morris)
Welwyn-Hatfield (Mr. Murphy)
Halesowen and Stourbridge (Mr. Stokes)
Poole (Mr. Ward) and the Earl of Kinnoull and the Lord Newall

From the Labour party:

The right hon. Members for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson)
Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Millan)

The hon. Members for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Brown)
Neath (Mr. Coleman)
Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Edwards)
Wallsend (Mr. Garrett)
Riverside (Mr. Parry)
Hemsworth (Mr. Woodall)

From the Liberal party:

The hon. Member for
Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross)

HOME DEPARTMENT

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many policemen have been the subject of disciplinary action or inquiry, or have been dismissed, in the course of, or arising out of, the coal mining dispute;

(2) how many policemen have been charged with offences arising out of the coal mining dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that a total of 551 complaints were made against the police in connection with policing the dispute, of which 111 were subsequently withdrawn. Investigation of such complaints and subsequent action normally takes several months to complete and it is too early for full information to be available.

I understand, however, that the Police Complaints Board's annual report for 1984 will contain some statistics on cases which reached it in that year on which action has been completed.

Police Sirens

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Metropolitan police keep records of the time and circumstances in which police vehicle sirens are used.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from all the chief constables in England and Wales regarding the extent to which they keep records of the time and circumstances in which police vehicle sirens are used.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. I understand that such records are not kept.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are issued to (a) the Metropolitan police and (b) other police forces on the use of police vehicle sirens.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police guidance on use of police vehicle sirens is that they are for use when a police driver answering an urgent call needs to obtain a clear passage through traffic. Guidance in other forces is similar.

Metropolitan Police (Libel Actions)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the libel actions brought by senior police officers in the past three years with his Department's consent, in which the Metropolitan police have assumed responsibility for the plaintiffs' legal costs; which of such libel actions are in respect of serving police officers, and which are in respect of police officers who have left the Metropolitan police before the concluion of libel actions; which firms of solicitors are employed to conduct such cases, and in the case of the Metropolitan police solicitor, how many members of his Department are involved in the preparation of such cases; what criteria he or the Metropolitan police employ when negotiating out-of-court cash settlements in such cases; what cash settlements have been received by serving or former police officers as a result of such actions; and what legal costs have been incurred in each of the last three years by the Metropolitan police in respect of both concluded and current libel actions of this kind, including solicitor-and-own-client costs not recoverable from the defendant.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police require the consent of my right hon. and learned Friend to assume responsibility for the legal costs of any police officer who brings an action for libel. Since 1 January 1982 only one such action has been brought by a Metropolitan police officer. It was brought by Deputy Assistant Commissioner Powis, who has since retired, against The Observer. The preparation of that case is in the hands of the Metropolitan police solicitors department, and occupies a small part of the time of one solicitor and one higher executive officer, with typing assistance. Legal costs incurred by the Metropolitan police in this case including solicitor and own client costs are estimated to be £5,700. Negotiations for settlement of this and other cases of this kind take into account the advice of counsel.

Since 1 January 1982, two other cases have been settled: that brought by Commander Stockwell against the New Statesman and others in 1981 in which the defendants agreed in court to pay damages and full costs; and that of Assistant Commissioner Kelland and Assistant Commissioner Gibson against The Times, which was settled out of court, no action having been brought, for a sum in damages and full costs.

Sir Michael Giddings

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to the nature of the acts alleged to have been committed during the harassment of Sir Michael Giddings in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that the acts of harassment reported to him by Sir Michael Giddings include nuisance telephone calls, many of them abusive, made to both Sir Michael and his wife; hundreds of unsolicited letters sent to his private address; demonstrators calling at his home; trespassers in his garden; the breaking of a window; and the posting of a parcel of excreta through the letter box.

The chief constable informs me that it has not been possible to identify people who might be prosecuted for criminal acts committed during this harassment.

Quangos

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Working Party on Magistrates' Courts submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: The working party provides advice and guidance to the magistrates' courts service on matters of practice and procedure; it does not advise the Department.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Standing Committee on Crime Prevention submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In the past 12 months, the Home Office has taken forward matters remitted to it by the standing committee as follows:

(a) A publicity leaflet on video theft has been published by the Home Office and has been widely disseminated by the police forces and by the National Television Rental Association.

(b) The Home Office, in conjunction with the Department of Transport, is considering the distribution of car security leaflets with postal communications from the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre.

(c) The Home Office, in conjunction with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives, is undertaking an exercise to identify examples of successful local authority crime prevention initiatives. These will receive national circulation in due course.

Effective crime prevention requires the particiaption of all sections of the community, not simply central Government action. For this reason, the Standing Committee, which has a wide membership, including representatives of industry, commerce, the police, local authorities and Government, provides a valuable national forum for the exchange of ideas, experience and expertise in crime prevention matters. The Committee, (now designated the Standing Conference on Crime Prevention) has recently been strengthened by the addition of a steering body and working groups tasked to examine selected aspects of crime and their prevention.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Police Advisory Committee on Sexual Offences submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: During the period in question the Policy Advisory Committee on Sexual Offences has submitted no advice direct to my right hon. and learned Friend. It has, however, given advice to the Criminal Law Revision Committee on several occasions during that committee's review of the law on prostitution.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Police Advisory Board submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Board, which meets under the chairmanship of my right hon. and learned Friend, met twice during the 12 months to 31 March 1985. The main result was a revision of the board's constitution, to provide more effective methods of working. Certain amendments were also agreed to the drafts of new complaints and discipline regulations and to the draft of guidance on complaints and discipline procedures which is to be issued to chief officers of police. The board is also the basis of wide-ranging formal and informal consultations between the Department, the local authority associations and the police staff associations.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Committee on Animal Experiments submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: In the past 12 months the advisory committee made recommendations on 10 specific matters arising out of the administration of the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 which had been referred to them by the Secretary of State. Eight of the recommendations have been adopted by the Department. The other two are under consideration.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Board on Restricted Patients submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: During the period in question my right hon. and learned Friend sought and received the board's advice on 52 cases. In a few cases the advice has only recently been received and is still being considered. In the remainder he decided to act in accordance with the advice given by the board in all cases except one.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Criminal Law Revision Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: In July 1984 the Criminal Law Revision Committee submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend its sixteenth report on "Prostitution in the Street", which he presented to Parliament in August 1984 (Cmnd. 9329). We have given our full support and assistance to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake, (Miss Fookes) whose Sexual Offences Bill seeks to give effect to the recommendations made in that report concerning the accosting of women by men. The other recommendations in the report will be considered alongside those in the committee's report on the remaining aspects of prostitution, which is expected later this year.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: During the year ending 31 March 1985, the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs has considered the possible inclusion of a number of substances within the controls provided by the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. The council's advice that one drug, alfentanil, should come within the scope of the Act, was implemented with effect from 1 January 1985. The council continues to keep under review other matters relating to the misuse of drugs.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Licensing Planning Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: In the period 1 April 1984 to 31 October 1984, when the Licensing Planning Committee for the Metropolis was abolished, no advice was received from the committee.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Committee on Training for Justices' Clerks' Assistants submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Mellor: The Committee on Training for Justices' Clerks' Assistants, which met three times in those 12 months, provides a forum for the direct exchange of views between representatives of organisations concerned with the magistrates' courts service, and of training institutions, and officials of Government Departments. It does not collectively submit formal advice, but the views expressed by members during meetings and in correspondence are always taken into account by the Home Office in considering the development of existing training or the introduction of new schemes.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Six substantive issues requiring action by the Department were considered during this period and appropriate action has been taken on all but one item, in respect of which my right hon. and learned Friend proposes to issue a circular and printed report shortly.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Council on Race Relations submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Waddington: The council has met twice in the last 12 months. It meets either under my chairmanship or that of my right hon. and learned Friend. Ministers from other Departments are invariably present also. The council provides a valuable forum for discussion of a wide range of issues, but it has not been the practice for it to offer formal advice.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for citizenship were under consideration at the end of March; and how this compares with figures for each of the past five years.

Mr. Waddington: There were 35,000 applications for British citizenship under consideration at the end of March. The corresponding figures for that month in each of the five earlier years are as follows; the figures have been rounded.

	Applications
1981	62,000
1982	80,000
1983	88,000
1984	64,000

Prison Department (Financial Information System)

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the first year's results of the prison department's new financial information system to be available.

Mr. Brittan: Information drawn from the prison department's costing system about the costs of the prison service in the financial year ended 31 March 1984 is being made available in a special report — "The Prison Department Financial Report 1983-84" — which is published today. A copy will be placed in the Library.

CIVIL SERVICE

Promotions

Mr. Eggar asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many civil servants in the rank of principal were promoted to assistant secretary in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will also publish a table correlating for each year the age of each candidate at date of promotion with the length of time served as a principal at that date.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of promotions from principal to assistant secretary in each of the years 1980 to 1983 and from principal to grade 5 in 1984 are as follows:

	Number
1981	72
1982	65
1983	70

* Provisional.

The tables give details of the age and length of service in the principal grade of the promotees in each of the five years.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Industrial Action)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has drawn up contingency plans to deal with the possible disruption of examinations by teachers taking industrial action.

Sir Keith Joseph: I would not expect teachers to damage their pupils' prospects by deliberately disrupting public examinations and I am pleased that the two largest teacher unions decided at their recent conferences to desist from such action.

AS-level Examination

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South, Official Report, 1 April, column 424, what where the numbers and names of organisations which gave specific assent or dissent, respectively, to the principle of introducing an AS-level examination; and by what means the responses of the organisations referred to will be published.

Sir Keith Joseph: As I explained in my earlier answer, no simple tally of those who supported and opposed the proposals is possible. Nor would it be right for the Government to publish the responses to the May 1984 consultative paper. It is for those who responded to decide whether or not to make their views known publicly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Aerospace

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to lay a further order under section 7 of the British Aerospace Act 1980 in the light of his intention to dispose of the Government's residual shareholding in British Aerospace.

Mr. Butcher: I intend to make a further order under section 7 of the British Aerospace Act 1980 shortly after the shares to be sold by the Government have been registered in the names of new holders following payment of the final instalment of the purchase price.

Exchange Risk Guarantee Scheme

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applicants in England have (a) applied for and (b) been granted loans under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sectors, respectively; what has been (i) the total amount and (ii) the average amount lent to each applicant under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sector schemes, respectively; and if he will estimate the number of jobs created in England as a result of the scheme.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applicants in Northern Ireland have (a) applied for and (b) been granted loans under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sectors, respectively; what has been (i) the total amount and (ii) the average amount lent to each applicant under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sector schemes, respectively; and if he will estimate the number of jobs created in Northern Ireland as a result of the scheme.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applicants in Scotland have (a) applied for and (b) been granted loans under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sectors, respectively; what has been (i) the total amount and (ii) the average amount lent to each applicant under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sector schemes, respectively; and if he will estimate the number of jobs created in Scotland as a result of the scheme.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many applicants in Wales have (a) applied for and (b) been granted loans under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sectors, respectively; what has been (i) the total amount and (ii) the average amount lent to each applicant under the exchange risk guarantee scheme in each year of its existence in the public and private sector schemes, respectively; and if he will estimate the number of jobs created in Wales as a result of the scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I am also replying on behalf of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Northern Ireland and Scotland.

Details of loans made directly by the European Investment Bank and the European Coal and Steel Community and through the agency operated by Her Majesty's Government under the exchange risk guarantee scheme to the private sector are as follows:

Details of applications received, some of which are not formalised, are not readily available. It is estimated that the investment financed by these loans has helped to create or safeguard over 70,000 jobs.

Public sector borrowers are not eligible for support under the exchange risk guarantee scheme.

In addition to the above loans, firms have access to European Community loans through the agency of certain financial institutions, including most clearing banks. Exchange risk guarantees have been provided on about £105 million of Community funds lent to these institutions for them to on-lend in sub-loans to the private sector.

Data on the geographic spread and timing of these sub-loans and their employment effects are not readily available. The following table gives the annual amounts of cover taken up by the agents since January 1982 when the full-scale agencies scheme came into operation.

WALES

Forestry Land

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total acreage of forestry land sold by the Forestry Commission in Wales over the last 12 months; and if he will estimate the value of these estates and represent the total acreage sold as a percentage of Welsh Forestry Commission land.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas [pursuant to his reply, 4 April, 1985, c. 702.]: Sales of forest land in Wales by the Forestry Commission in the 12 months to 21 March 1985—the latest date for which figures are available—amounted to 1,900 hectares for a total sale price of £2·4 million. This area represented 1·3 per cent. of the Forestry Commission's forest land holdings in Wales taken at the start of the programme of sales in 1981.

EMPLOYMENT

Quangos

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March, the Tripartite Steering Group on Job Satisfaction submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Tripartite Steering Group on Job Satisfaction which is chaired by a Minister of this Department met three times in the 12 months to 31 March. It issued an annual report in June 1984 and a further report is expected in the next few months.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March, the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. The compilation of the index follows the recommendations of the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee as to its coverage and method of construction. The committee is convened from time to time to advise on matters of principle but is not involved in the monthly computations which simply follow established procedures. It was convened in September 1984 to consider a number of specific issues and I hope will make its recommendations by the end of the year.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March, the Civil Service Arbitration Tribunal submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not the function of the Civil Service Arbitration Tribunal to give advice to the Department.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March, the Race Relations Employment Advisory Group submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. There were no meetings of this group in the year ending 31 March 1985.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Committee on Homeworking submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been no meetings of the Homeworking Advisory Committee during the 12 months to 31 March.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Advisory Committee on Women's Employment submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. This committee is in the process of being reconstituted and did not meet in the 12 months to 31 March 1985.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the total employed labour force, giving figures for men and women to the latest date, and one year ago.

Mr. Alan Clark: In September 1984, the latest date for which information is available, there were an estimated 14,130,000 males and 9,968,000 females in the employed labour force in the United Kingdom. The corresponding figures for September 1983 were 14,053,000 males and 9,707,000 females.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were available for employment on 1 January 1985; and how this figure compares with each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the available information for the periods requested on unemployed people available for work and claiming benefit.

Unmployment—United Kingdom

Self-employed Persons

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of people currently self-employed, and how that figure compares with a year ago.

Mr. Alan Clark: In September 1984, the latest date for which information is available, there were an estimated 2,526,000 self-employed persons in the United Kingdom. The corresponding figure for September 1983 was 2,289,000.

Vacancies

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he has any estimate as to the number of jobs currently advertised and unfilled as notified to jobcentres and professional and executive register offices;

(2) whether he will consider detailing the number of known vacancies at the same time as his Department issues the monthly figures for those out of work.

Mr. Alan Clark: A count is made each month of those vacancies notified to Government employment services which remain unfilled on the day of the count. These figures are published on a regional basis in his Department's monthly press notice on unemployment and vacancies which is available in the Library. On 8 March 1985 the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres and professional executive recruitment offices in the United Kingdom was 155,559.

Inverclyde

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Inverclyde have their wages determined by wages councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available.

SCOTLAND

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will present in tabular form, in respect of each local authority area in Scotland (a) the actual amount of rate support grant paid in 1978-79, (b) the actual amount of rate support grant paid in 1979-80 and, in each case, the current value in real terms and (c) the actual amount of rate support grant presently due to be paid in 1985-86.

Mr. Ancram: The actual amounts of grant paid or to be paid in each year are set out in the table. Rate support grant is not expressed in real terms as relevant expenditure includes loan charges, a variable item, and as provision for local authority expenditure and grant has since 1982-83 been expressed in cash terms.

Felled Woodland (Replanting)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the areas of felled woodland which have been replanted by the Forestry Commission in each of the last 10 years, and also showing the percentage of that area which has been planted with each of the main tree species.

TRANSPORT

Transport Subventions

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport, what is the total subvention from public funds nationally and locally in the last year for which figures are available which goes to (a) all public transport, (b) British Rail and (c) buses.

Mr. David Mitchell: In 1983-84 total subventions from public funds to public transport in Great Britain are estimated at about £1,950 million. About £960 million was for British Railways, £725 million for buses, underground railways and ferries, and £265 million for concessionary fares for the elderly and disabled, mainly on bus services. Further breakdown is not available. In addition, fuel duty rebate of just over £100 million was paid to operators of local bus services.

Rail Services (Timekeeping)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the answer of 27 March regarding the punctuality of trains in the London Midland region of British Rail, he will give similar data for services from Birmingham, Glasgow, Manchester, and Liverpool, respectively, via Rugby to London Euston and vice versa.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from British Rail that the punctuality of trains over these routes in 1984 was as follows:

per cent.

	On time	On time or less than five minutes late	Over 30 minutes late
Glasgow-Euston*	47	56	13
Birmingham-Euston*	65	78	2
Liverpool and Manchester-Euston*†	63	76	3

* British Rail records punctuality data either for routes or small groups of routes. Trains from Liverpool and Manchester are recorded as being in the same group of routes and are not therefore available separately.

British Rail's strategy for inter-city services sets the objective that, by 1987, 85 per cent. of all inter-city trains should arrive within five minutes of published time.

FV South Stack (Disappearance)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport why it took from 19 January 1984 until March 1985 to prepare and send the factual statement of the events surrounding the disappearance of the South Stack to the next of kin concerned.

Mr. David Mitchell: The FV South Stack was reported missing on 19 May 1984 and the inspector's report was completed on 19 July 1984, not 19 January 1984 as stated in the reply to the hon. Member on 1 April 1985, at column 429.

It is the Department's practice to isue a factual statement only when the report has been considered and departmental action arising from the report has been completed. Although the factual statement was ready for release at the end of October 1984 it is regretted that owing to an oversight it was not so released until March this year. I tender on behalf of my Department apologies for any added distress which may unwittingly have been caused for the relatives of those lost.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport why he will not make available a copy of the inspector's report into the disappearance of the South Stack to the hon. Member for Warrington, North; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Reports of preliminary inquiries into shipping casualties are confidential to the Department. They enable the Department to establish the cause of the casualty and to consider what further action is required in the interests of marine safety. However, to be as helpful as possible the Department releases a factual statement based upon the report. I shall send a copy of the factual statement on the South Stack to the hon. Member.

Fishing Vessels (Disappearance)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all incidents of disappearances of fishing boats over the last 10 years, and the findings of any inquiry of his Department; and whether any of the disappearances were attributed to the presence of submarines.

Mr. David Mitchell: The following 12 fishing vessels have disappeared or been lost in unexplained circumstances in the 10 years 1975 to 1984 and have been described as "missing" in the departmental records. None was attributed to the presence of submarines.

Driving Test

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he has any plans to amend the scope and nature of his Department's driving test; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will consider including night-time driving and motorway driving as additional criteria in his Department's driving test.

Mrs. Chalker: In its recent report on road safety the Transport Committee recommended that my right hon. Friend consider possible changes to the driving test. He will give his views on this subject when he responds to the committee's report as a whole, which he will do as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

"Wealth of Waste"

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Her Majesty's Stationery Office first received the manuscript copy of the report of the Trade and Industry Committee Review 1983-84 entitled the "Wealth of Waste"; when proofs were returned to the Committee for checking; when the checked proofs were returned to Her Majesty's Stationery Office; what instructions were received from the Committee regarding the time-scale for the printing of the Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Her Majesty's Stationery Office received copy on 9 November 1984 and returned proofs on 14 November. The checked proofs were returned to HMSO on 6 December and the report was published on 19 December, as agreed with the Committee clerk.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. John Browne asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consider extending the scope of the business expansion scheme by reducing the "lock-up" period for funds invested from five years to three years.

Mr. Moore: The purpose of the scheme is to encourage investment in small companies on a reasonably long-term basis. There are no plans to change the rules of the business expansion scheme, apart from the proposed changes announced by my right hon. Friend in his Budget statement on 19 March.

Inflation

Mr. Dubs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in Britain's rate of inflation over the past 12 months compared with the United States of America, Germany, France and Japan.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The 12-month increases in consumer price indices for February 1984 and February 1985 in the United Kingdom, United States of America, West Germany, France and Japan were:

	per cent. change on a year earlier
	February 1984	February 1985
United Kingdom	5·1	5·4
United States	4·6	3·5
West Germany	3·1	2·3
France	9·0	6·4
Japan	2·9	1·4

Consumer price indices for member countries are published monthly in OECD Economic Indicators.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated amount of value added tax received from improvement/repair work on residences in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Hayhoe: Estimates are as follows:

1975	90
1976	100
1977	115
1978	125
*1979	220
1980	345
1981	380
1982	425
1983	485
†1984	660

Notes:

* Standard rate of VAT increased from 8 per cent. to 15 per cent. on 18 June 1979.

† VAT at standard rate imposed on alterations, which were previously zero-rated, from 1 June 1984.

Mr. Coombs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all significant changes from the exposure clauses published in the autumn of 1984 which he has made in his Finance Bill proposals for implementation of the recommendations about value added tax in the Keith committee report.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have decided, in the light of representations made by interested parties and comments from a number of hon. Members, that the following changes to the exposure clauses should be embodied in the Finance Bill, together with a number of other minor modifications of drafting:

Exposure Clause 2 (Finance Bill Clause 12)

As specifically proposed by the Keith committee, provision is now made for statutory cover to safeguard the admissibility of induced evidence, along the lines of S105 Taxes Management Act 1970.

Exposure Clause 3 (Finance Bill Clause 13)

(a) Provision is now made for a statutory defence of due diligence and reasonable excuse, on the basis that the taxpayer will not be liable to penalty under the clause if he satifies the Commissioners of Customs and Excise, or on appeal a VAT tribunal, that he had exercised all due diligence and there was a reasonable excuse for the conduct in question.

(b) Provision is also made that a taxpayer will not be liable to penalty under the clause if, at a time when he had no reason to believe that inquiries were being made into his VAT affairs by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, he furnished them with full information about the understatement or incorrect payment concerned.

(c) The trigger points for penalty under the three objective arithmetical tests are to be tripled, to 30 per cent., £3,000 or 1·5 per cent. and 15 per cent., respectively.

(d) Where an assessment made by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in the absence of a return understates the true VAT liability by an amount which would otherwise attract serious misdeclaration penalty, the taxpayer is to be allowed a period of 30 days from the date of the assessment to take all reasonable steps to draw the underassessment to the attention of Customs and Excise, before liability to penalty arises.

(e) Provision is now made that liability to a penalty under the clause in respect of an overpayment made to the taxpayer will only arise in consequence of sums actually claimed by him on VAT returns.

Exposure Clause 4 (Finance Bill Clause 14)

(a) Appropriate provision is now made for a statutory defence of due diligence and reasonable excuse.

(b) Where the fixed element of the penalty under the clause is increased by Treasury order, the increased amount will now apply to failures to comply which continued after the date of the increase.

Exposure Clause 5 (Finance Bill Clause 15)

(a) Appropriate provision is now made for a statutory defence of due diligence and reasonable excuse.

(b) Provision is now made to allow, subject to safeguards, the temporary removal and use by the taxpayer of assets distrained for outstanding VAT debts and held subject to a walking possession agreement.

Exposure Clause 6 (Finance Bill Clause 16)

Appropriate provision is now made for a statutory defence of due diligence and reasonable excuse.

Exposure Clause 8 (Finance Bill Clause 18)

(a) Appropriate provision is now made for a statutory defence of due diligence and reasonable excuse.

(b) The objective conditions for liability to default surcharge and for release from a surcharge liability notice are to be relaxed in order to target more closely on the most persistent defaulters. The new requirement is two defaults in one year, rather than two years, to trigger a surcharge liability notice. Similarly, a notice will expire after one year clear of all defaults, rather than two years.

(c) The proposed extension of liability to surcharge, from the taxpayer to those carrying on his business in a representative capacity, is now withdrawn.

Exposure Clause 9 (Finance Bill Clause 19)

Repayment supplement is now to be made available after a reckonable delay of 30 rather than 60 days.

Exposure Clause 11

No such clause is to be included in this year's Finance Bill for the reasons given in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Sir W. Clark) on 15 April.

Exposure Clause 12 (Finance Bill Clause 21)

(a) The time limit after final determination of the tax concerned for assessing tax-geared penalties, interest or surcharges is to be reduced from three years to two years.

(b) The grounds for allowing Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to make assessments of VAT going back more than six years are now narrowed to exclude cases of "serious misdeclaration".

Exposure Clause 18 (Finance Bill Clause 27)

Express statutory provision is now made that in respect of the qualifying elements for liability to penalty under exposure clause 2 (object of evading VAT and conduct involving an element of dishonesty) the burden of proof in an appeal against the assessment of such a penalty shall lie upon the Commissioners of Customs and Excise.

Exposure Clause 20 (Finance Bill Clause 29)

The clause now extends to cover awards of costs in those hearings, for example, in registration cases, where there is no amount of tax to confirm or vary.

Exposure Clause 21 (Finance Bill Clause 30)

The clause now extends to embrace companies subject to an administration order, to reflect the new provision and terminology being introduced by the Insolvency Bill.

Exposure Clause 22 (Finance Bill Clause 32)

In order to take account of the cash flow advantages which VAT confers on most businesses, the interpretation clause now makes it clear that insufficiency of funds to pay any tax due does not constitute a reasonable excuse for any of the defaults introduced by the Finance Bill.

Home Improvement (Tax Relief)

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total estimated amount of tax relief granted in respect of loans for the improvement of a person's main residence for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Butterfill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the payment of March non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with article 10(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77 the Commission has invited member states to pay on 22 April instead of 20 May non-VAT own resources collected in March. These own resources consist of agricultural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties. The Government are complying with this request.

An amount not exceeding £83 million will be paid on 22 April; the payment of levies and duties on 20 May 1985, which is made under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972, will be reduced by an appropriate amount. There will therefore be no net addition to public expenditure.

HMSO

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the reasons for changing the staffing of those dealing with Members' requests for Her Majesty's Stationery Office publications at the Nine Elms depot; if the current standard of service will be maintained; what are the financial savings which have resulted; and if the Vote in support of the Stationery Office has been reduced by a similar sum to the savings.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 36-7]: A recent staff inspection within HMSO has recommended that the duties involved in dealing with Members' requests for the priority supply of HMSO publications are appropriate to the Clerical Officer grade rather than Executive Officer, provided that higher level guidance and support are available when necessary to maintain the present level of service. HMSO would expect the implementation of the recommendation to result in the estimated financial savings of around £3,000 pa being reflected in Class XIII Vote 20, Stationery and Printing Supplies to the Houses of Parliament, etc.

Freeports

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will carry out a review of the areas which were given designated freeport status and report progress in each area.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 37]: The designation of each of the areas chosen as freeports is subject to review after a five-year period. The Government have commissioned a research study to monitor their progress during that time. Of the six freeports, Southampton and Liverpool have commenced operations.

Value Added Tax (Advertising)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate how much tax he expects to raise from the imposition of value added tax on newspaper and magazine advertising; what impact this will have on employment; and how much of the value added tax revenue will come from advertisements placed by charities.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 38]: The extension of VAT at the standard rate to newspaper and magazine advertising is expected to raise £30 million in 1985-86 and £50 million in a full year. Taxation is only one of a number of factors that affects employment and it is not possible to determine the precise effect of this change, though it is not expected to be significant. VAT revenue from advertisements placed by charities is estimated at less than £1 million.

Value Added Tax (Charities)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate how much revenue he expects to lose by the exemption from value added tax of computers purchased for medical use by charitable bodies.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 38]: About £5 million in a full year.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Doctors and Dentists (Entry Regulations)

3. Mrs. Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to end the free entry into Britain of doctors and dentists.

Mr. Fowler: On 26 March my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary laid before the House a statement of changes to the immigration rules. From 1 April, doctors and dentists from overseas who wish to practise in the United Kingdom need to comply with the immigration arrangements which apply to most other professional groups, except for those seeking entry for the purpose of post-graduate training in hospitals who can obtain permit-free employment for a period of up to four years.

Prescription Charges

15. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to amend the schedule of conditions which entitle patients to exemption from prescription charges.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans at present to change the list of medical conditions which entitle people to exemption from prescription charges.

NHS (Expenditure)

16. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the gross domestic product was spent on the National Health Service in the most recent year for which figures are available; and how this compares with the percentage in 1978.

Mr. John Patten: The United Kingdom spent 5·6 per cent. of the gross domestic product on the National Health Service in 1983; the corresponding figure for 1978 was 4·8 per cent.

Psychiatric and Psychologically Disturbed Patients

17. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much is being spent on the re-establishment of former psychiatric and psychologically disturbed patients in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Money is spent by a wide range of statutory and voluntary bodies on services for mentally disordered people in the community. We do not have enough detailed information centrally to enable us to make a worthwhile estimate of the total sum spent by all these bodies from all sources.

Cervical Cancer

18. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to amend the regulations governing the remuneration of general practitioners undertaking screening for cervical cancer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. We particularly encourage general medical practitioners to screen women most at risk from cervical cancer — those over 35 and those who have been pregnant on three or more occasions. They receive a specific fee when they do this. This fee is just one of a number of fees and allowances, including capitation fees, which general medical practitioners receive.

The total contract provides general practitioners with an income and reimburses their practice expenses for providing all general medical services, including all cervical cytology testing, to their NHS patients. We are therefore quite satisfied that general practitioners are adequately remunerated for all the requirements of good up-to-date medical practice, including the screening of all women at risk.

31. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to ensure that a proposed call and recall system for cervical cancer screening linked to a national computer, is introduced in Bradford.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have instructed all health authorities to introduce effective cervical cancer screening programmes. We will shortly be asking all authorities to check the effectiveness of their particular programmes.

200. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any representations from (i) scientific research organisations, or (ii) women's health organisations concerning the possible links between the use of oral contraceptives and cervical cancer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received no recent representations on this subject. Research findings on the question of a possible link between oral contraceptives and cancer are kept under constant review by the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Heating Allowances

20. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about the level and manner of payment of heating allowances.

Mr. Whitney: We regularly receive letters from both right hon. and hon. Members and from outside organisations and members of the public about all aspects of the help with heating costs which we provide for the least well off—those on supplementary benefit.

Social Security Reviews

21. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the evidence submitted to the recent social security reviews.

Mr. Whitney: We have made it clear throughout the review that the Government do not propose to publish or summarise evidence. Individuals and organisations are free to publish their evidence if they wish, and a number have already done so.

Homes for the Elderly

22. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many homes for the elderly were opened in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the numbers of residential homes is collected as at 31 March each year. Information as at 31 March 1985 is not yet available. Between 31 March 1983 and 31 March 1984 there was a net increase of 717 homes.

Elderly People

23. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if any assessment has been made of the total cost to local authorities of maintaining in the community those elderly people previously admitted to residential establishments run by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Various pieces of work on the comparative costs of different types of provision for elderly people have been or are being carried out, but the wide variations in local circumstances and in the needs of individual elderly people make it impossible to estimate overall costs on the basis of the information at present available.

Bus Deregulation

24. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the effect of the deregulation of buses on patients' and visitors' access to health facilities.

Mr. John Patten: We have had representations from the Strathclyde regional council about the effects of local transport policy on access to health care for the physically impaired. Other representations have been made to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, but under the terms proposed in the Transport Bill local authorities will be able to continue to subsidise services which they believe are socially desirable and which the competitive market does not provide.

Draught-Proofing Grants

25. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he proposes to promote the draught-proofing grant.

Mr. Whitney: Supplementary benefit single payments for draught-proofing are publicised in leaflets issued by our Department and by the Energy Efficiency Office. A further leaflet will be published shortly by the Energy Efficiency Office, which has also issued a number of posters publicising the help available to people whose homes are cold and draughty.

Supplementary Benefit

26. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to alter the payment of supplementary benefits paid to families of people deemed on strike.

Mr. Newton: The trade dispute provisions of the supplementary benefit scheme apply to any person who is without employment because of a stoppage of work due to a trade dispute at his place of employment, unless he can show that he is not participating in, or directly interested in, the dispute. Whether these provisions apply in a particular case is a question of fact to be decided by the independent adjudicating authorities. There is no question of people being deemed to be on strike.

The Government have at present no plans to change these rules, or the regulations which lay down what is payable to persons affected, except to amend the regulations to allow payments for funeral expenses. The hon. Member will know that extra-statutory payments are being made for such expenses pending this amendment.

Open Heart Surgery (Queen Elizabeth Medical Centre, Birmingham)

27. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to increase the intensive care facilities for patients undergoing open heart surgery at Queen Elizabeth medical centre in Birmingham; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 1 April at column 494. I shall be writing to the hon. Member shortly in reply to her recent correspondence on this subject.

Kidney Treatment

28. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on waiting lists for kidney treatment.

Mr. John Patten: The number of patients awaiting treatment for renal failure is not recorded centrally. On 1 April 1985 the number of patients in the United Kingdom who were awaiting a kidney transplant, according to information supplied by the United Kingdom transplant service, was 2,862; virtually all of these patients will already be receiving dialysis. It is likely that this figure will continue to increase despite record numbers of kidney transplant operations performed in 1983 and 1984, since improvements in surgical and immunosuppressive techniques mean that more renal patients are being referred as suitable for transplantation and more patients are being taken on to dialysis.

In the 12 months following the launch in February 1984 of the campaign to promote the donor card scheme, over 12·5 million new cards were issued and the number of kidney transplants performed was 1,415, 30 per cent. more than the total of 1,089 for the previous 12 months.

Medical and Dental Treatment (Charges)

29. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the proportion of the population exempt from paying for medical prescriptions and dental treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1983, the latest year for which figures are available, we estimate that about two fifths of the population of England were eligible for exemption from prescription charges and about one quarter from dental charges. These estimates exclude people who could claim exemption from prescription charges because of a specified medical condition as we do not have figures on the number of people suffering from these conditions at any one time. They also exclude people who are entitled to remission of charges on low income grounds, for example, all supplementary benefit and family income supplement claimants and an unknown number of dependents.

In total, about 60 per cent. of all courses of dental treatment and about 72 per cent. of all prescription items are provided free of charge.

Housing Benefit (Report)

30. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the housing benefit review report.

Mr. Whitney: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 12 March at column 107, we intend to publish conclusions and proposals for change following the social security review as soon as possible. The report of the independent housing benefit review team will be published at the same time.

Cigarette Manufacturers

32. Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give direction to health authorities that they should not invest their funds in shares of companies manufacturing cigarettes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No Exchequer funds are involved in shareholding by health authorities. Health authorities—and special trustees appointed by my right hon. Friend—have, in their capacity as trustees, powers under the Trustee Investment Act 1961 to invest any trust funds they hold for National Health Service purposes. The Act obliges trustees to obtain and consider proper advice on investments, but non-financial considerations in relation to investment policies are a matter for the trustees.

Dental Charges

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the operation of the new arrangements for patients' contributions to dental charges.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is too soon to say whether the new system for calculating charges is operating satisfactory since this only came into effect on 1 April. We do not, however, foresee any serious difficulties.

Dactinomycin

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government will seek powers to amend the Biological Compendium to ensure that the antibiotic dactinomycin is tested using high pressure liquid chromatography rather than the LD50 animal test as at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are already considering the proposition that reference to the LD50 animal test for this product in the Biological Compendium should be replaced by a reference to another test, possibly the use of high pressure liquid chromatography. Such a change in the compendium could be made under existing powers, after consultation with the Medicines Commission. We hope to reach a decision soon.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received on the limited drugs list; and what is the average length of time taken by his Department to reply to letters on this issue.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received over 13,000 letters about the selected list of drugs since we announced the proposals on 8 November 1984. We are endeavouring to answer all letters as quickly as possible, but the volume of correspondence is such that some delays are occurring. I regret that some apparent discourtesy to correspondents may have occurred, but this is inevitable when organised write-in campaigns by lobbyists swell the volume of correspondence on any subject to this extent.

Social Workers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what consultations he is having with local authorities and the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work concerning proposals to revise the system of training and assessment of approved social workers as defined by the Mental Health Act 1983;

(2) if he will undertake to provide additional funds for any extra training or assessment costs falling upon local authorities or the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work arising from the revised system of training approved social workers which takes account of problems resulting from the current industrial action;

(3) what is his estimate of the expenditure incurred by local authorities in training approved social workers under the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the latest position is with regard to the current reviews being undertaken by his Department.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 12 March, at column 107.

Health Authorities (Headed Notepaper)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will set out the rules governing the use of health authority headed notepaper by employees resident at health authority premises when writing to hon. Members;

(2) whether any steps have been taken to protect by copyright or other means, the name of National Health Service hospitals when used on headed notepaper.

Mr. John Patten: We would expect health authorities to ensure that all property of the authority, including writing paper, is used for official purposes only. If the hon. Member has a particular instance in mind, I suggest he takes it up in the first place with the chairman of the appropriate district health authority.

Married Women's Half-Test

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will abolish the married women's half-test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: The half-test is an additional contribution test for retirement pension purposes, formerly applying to all married women, which required them to fulfil, in addition to the standard conditions for receiving a pension in their own right, a condition that they must have full-rate national insurance contributions paid or credited up to a minimum level in at least half the number of years between their marriage and their 60th birthday.

This additional condition was abolished in 1979 for married women reaching the age of 60 after 5 April 1979. It has, however, continued to affect those who were already 60 by that date. Following a review of the European Communities' equal treatment directive, which came fully into effect in December 1984, the Government have decided that it would be right to abolish the residual effects of the half-test as from 22 December 1984. I have therefore tabled an amendment to the Social Security Bill now before the House to achieve this end.

I estimate that there are currently about 25,000 married women who may gain from this step, mainly married women whose husbands have not yet reached the age of 65. If Parliament agrees the proposed legislation, my Department will seek to contact them as soon as possible to invite claims. The additional benefit expenditure involved is expected to be about £25 million in 1985-86, and to decline thereafter.

Christmas Bonus

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to pay the Christmas bonus in 1985.

Mr. Fowler: A Christmas bonus of £10 will be paid again to people who for the week commencing 2 December are entitled to payment of one of the qualifying benefits.

Dependency Increases (Earnings Test)

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he proposes to use the regulation making powers in clause 7 of the Social Security Bill to provide an earnings test for dependency increases to invalidity benefit and retirement pension.

Mr. Newton: We propose that an adult dependency increase will be available if the weekly earnings of the beneficiary's spouse do not exceed the personal rate of unemployment benefit, currently £28·45. The test will be common to men and women and will apply to invalidity pension, retirement pension, severe disablement allowance and unemployability supplement with industrial disablement benefit. Existing beneficiaries will not lose as they will be protected by a transitional provision.

Leaflet Distribution Unit

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what delays are being experienced at his Department's leaflet distribution unit, Canons park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Emergency repairs to the unit's plumbing system began in January this year and are continuing. The main corridor has had to be torn up, thus severely restricting access to the storage areas. The unit is reduced to working with no mechanical aids, such as a fork-lift truck. Additional effects include the loss of heating, hot water and drinking water.

Every effort has been made to reorganise the work, but it has not been possible to avoid an increase in the time taken to fulfil orders, at present about six weeks.

Before this situation arose, plans were in hand to transfer the unit to new and improved accommodation at Wembley; the move is likely to take place in the summer.

I should like to record my appreciation to the staff at Canons park who have continued to work at the unit despite the many personal inconveniences resulting from the repairs.

Legal Aid

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the use of section 22 of the Legal Aid Act 1974.

Mr. Newton: Legal advice has been received to the effect that if a legal aid assessment officer were to pass information to a social security benefit officer, that would almost certainly contravene section 22(1) of the Legal Aid Act 1974. The departmental instructions providing for the disclosure of information have, therefore, been withdrawn. The Government will keep under review the question of whether amending legislation would be appropriate.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total administrative cost of each regional health authority in the last year to a convenient date, including the amounts for expenses and remuneration of chairmen and committees, the number of staff and the total of salaries and wages paid, the cost of rent and equipment, and all other significant items of expenditure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985, c. 242]: The table shows current expenditure on the administration of their own headquarters by each regional health authority in 1983-84. This is, of course, not the total cost of administration within a region as we could not produce figures for the administrative costs of all the districts, units and hospitals without disproportionate effect and expense.

3. The annual accounts of regional health authorities give only total figures for travelling and subsistence expenses, salaries and wages paid, the cost of rent and equipment and other details of expenditure. These totals include services such as ambulances, mass radiography and blood transfusions which regional health authorities provide and separate figures for headquarters administration are not collected. Statistics on the numbers of staff employed are also not broken down in this way.

Drugs (Costs)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to the reply of 14 March, Official Report, column 243, what was the total value of the discount on drugs costs from wholesalers and manufacturers given to dispensing doctors in the last year for which figures are available; and what savings would be made to the National Health Service as a whole if a similar level of discounts were given by drugs wholesalers and manufacturers to all purchases of drugs by or on behalf of the National Health Service;

(2) pursuant to the reply of 25 February, Official Report, column 71, whether discounts will continue to be available on drugs dispensed by dispensing doctors after 1 April; whether similar discounts are offered by drugs wholesalers and manufacturers to all or any other purchases of drugs by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 768-69]: Doctors buy many of their drugs from wholesalers and retail pharmacists but also purchase from manufacturers who may give very high discount. The dispensing doctors' discount inquiry which sampled purchases for the months of April to June 1983 identified that on average discount of 4·93 per cent. was obtained on purchases from all sources. The total value of savings to the National Health Service because of discount on drugs supplied by doctors in Great Britain in 1983-84 would have been about £4 million.

On the basis of an inquiry in 1981, it was assumed that pharmacist contractors received discounts averaging 5·96 per cent. The total value of discount on National Health Service drugs supplied by pharmacists in England and Wales in 1983-84 was £71 million, representing a saving to the National Health Service. Since that inquiry some pharmacists have been able to obtain larger discounts than those included in the existing arrangements on their purchases of drugs from wholesalers. From 1 January 1985 an endorsement scheme designed to take into account these higher discounts has been introduced. Any savings which accrue will also be to the benefit of the National Health Service.

Regional health authorities negotiate contracts with drug manufacturers and wholesalers including discount as appropriate. Details of local contracts are not available centrally, but I am glad to say that many health authorities negotiate very favourable contracts.

I have no reason to believe that discounts will not continue to be available to dispensing doctors after 1 April.

Supplementary Benefit (Students)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of meeting the entitlement to supplementary benefit of full-time students in advanced education (a) for the short Easter and Christmas vacations and (b) for the long vacations.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985]: Our estimates suggest an expenditure on supplementary benefit for students in full-time advanced education of some £500,000 in the short vacations and £60 million in the long vacation.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of meeting the entitlement of full-time students in advanced education (a) in respect of certificated housing benefit and (b) in respect of standard housing benefit.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985]: Our estimates suggest an annual expenditure of about £50 million for housing benefit paid to students in full-time advanced education.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Death Statistics)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what verdict was recorded on the death of those of the 11 prisoners listed as awaiting inquest in his answer of 25 January, Official Report, columns 534-35, in respect of whom the inquest has now been completed.

Mr. Mellor: The following verdicts are now available. Case numbers are those used in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Kilroy-Silk) on 25 January, at columns 533-36.

Case Number	Verdict
26	Natural causes: coronary thrombosis
48	Natural causes: kidney failure
49	Suicide: pulmonary embolism
50	Natural causes: staphylococal pyaemia
57	Suicide: asphyxia by hanging
60	Suicide: asphyxia by hanging
61	Natural causes: myocardial infarction
63	Natural causes: coronary artery thrombosis.

Verdicts in the other three cases are still awaited.

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides and how many attempted suicides have taken place in prisons in each of the last 25 years; and how many in each year have occurred at Swansea.

Mr. Mellor: The information available is as follows:

Number of Suicides

Year	All establishments including Swansea	Swansea

* One inquest verdict of an inmate who was found hanging is awaited. This was at Swansea. It is not included in these figures.

In 1982 there were 253 incidents of self-injury with apparent suicidal intent, of which two were at Swansea.

In 1983 there were 221 incidents of self-injury with apparent suicidal intent, of which eight were at Swansea.

Figures for self-injury for other years are not available.

Dogs

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the present maximum penalties which may be imposed on persons in charge of dogs fouling the pavement; and whether he has any plans to increase these.

Mr. Mellor: Byelaws for this purpose are made under the general power conferred by section 235 of the Local Government Act 1972. The maximum penalty which may be imposed by byelaws made under this power was doubled to £100 last May. The Government have no plans to increase it further.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to change the present legal definition of being in charge of a dog; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office model byelaw under which it is an offence for a person in charge of a dog to allow the dog to foul a footway or grass verge provides that, for the purposes of the byelaw, the owner of the dog shall be deemed in charge thereof, unless the court is satisfied that at the time when the dog fouled the footway or grass verge it had been placed in or taken into the charge of some other person. This definition was incorporated in the model byelaw in 1936 in response to representations from local authorities and in order to overcome difficulties caused by an earlier model byelaw. The model byelaw has been widely adopted, and I have no present reason to believe that the definition has given rise to problems or is in need of amendment.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total number of offences in connection with dogs for the last 12 months for which the statistics are available.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, relates to court proceedings for offences in connection with dogs and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 1" under offence classification 111 (offences relating to dogs) and 171 (revenue offence concerning dog licences). It is not possible to identify all offences that involved dogs; for example, details of offences of cruelty to animals do not distinguish the type of animal involved.

Suicides

Mr. Benyon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of all recorded suicide verdicts by coroners' courts in Buckinghamshire, Berkshire and Oxfordshire involving deaths of girls aged under 16 years between 20 December 1984 and 11 January 1985.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 27 March to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie), at column 247.

Identification Parades

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply of 28 March, Official Report, columns 282-83, if he will provide details of the districts involved in the identification parade survey carried out in 1982 and 1983.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All districts of the Metropolitan police were included in the survey in 1982 and 1983, except the Thames division, which polices the river Thames.

"Death Stars"

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ban the sale of the kung fu weapon known as "Death Stars".

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 12]: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so. As I stated in a previous pursuant reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 1 April, at column 449, there are many articles sold for legitimate purposes such as carving knives, scissors and razor blades which could be used as an offensive weapon and it would be quite impracticable to try to ban their sale. The police have not asked for tighter controls on "Death Stars" and no cases of misuse have been brought to my attention. We shall, however, continue to keep a close watch on the situation.

ENERGY

Magnox Fuel (Storage)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many dry storage facilities for spent Magnox fuel have been completed by the Central Electricity Generating Board; what proportion of spent fuel can be stored in this way; and what plans there are to extend those facilities to cater for all spent Magnox fuel.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB has one dry storage facility for approximately 900 tonnes of spent Magnox fuel located at Wylfa nuclear power station. This is used for the temporary storage of spent fuel from Wylfa prior to its transportation to BNFL Sellafield for reprocessing. The board has no current plans to build new dry storage facilities for Magnox fuel.

Nuclear Fuel (Reprocessing)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made in building the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield; what is the latest estimate of the cost of reprocessing in this plant; if terms have now been agreed between the Central Electricity Generating Board and British Nuclear Fuels plc for reprocessing spent fuel from advanced gas-cooled reactors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by BNFL that the construction programme for THORP (thermal oxide reprocessing plant) is proceeding according to plan to meet reprocessing commitments in the 1990s. BNFL's unit charges for reprocessing irradiated fuel are not available, for commercial reasons. The estimated costs for the storage and reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel are included in the estimated generating cost data published in the CEGB's "Analysis of Generating Costs", a copy of which is in the Library. BNFL and CEGB are in the process of finalising the contractual arrangements in respect of CEGB's commitment to the THORP project.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what changes have taken place in the United Kingdom demand for reprocessing spent nuclear fuel in the past five years.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the CEGB that its demand for reprocessing Magnox spent nuclear fuel has increased over the past five years as a result of improved power station performance. In the case of AGR reprocessing there has been a reduction in demand for reprocessing capacity in THORP for the reasons given by my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon Central (Mr. Moore) in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 28 July 1982, at column 546.

Demand for fast reactor fuel reprocessing at Dounreay has increased in line with the progressive commissioning to full operating capacity of the prototype fast reactor.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the number of officials and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council (AIIC) according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

WALES

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of officials, and their sections, who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, and the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council (AIIC) according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

PRIME MINISTER

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she will list all expenditure concerning the Falkland Islands and the United Kingdom military commitment to the islands which is not met by the Ministry of Defence.

The Prime Minister: Expenditure in the Falkland Islands not met by the Ministry of Defence, excluding expenditure by the Falkland Islands Government met from their own revenues, falls under the following headings:

(a) Rehabilitation: A rehabilitation grant of £15 million was announced in December 1982;

(b) Development: A development grant of £31 million was announced in December 1982;

(c) War damage compensation: Payments under the war damage compensation scheme, which was announced in July 1982, have to date totalled £3,244,000;

(d) Diplomatic Service personnel: The recurring cost of Diplomatic Service personnel in Port Stanley amounted to £171,530 in the financial year 1984-85.

Expenditure under all these headings is a charge to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office budget.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she will list all the documents requested from Her Majesty's Government by the Australian Royal Commission investigating nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s; and whether all such documents requested were provided.

The Prime Minister: A full list of the hundreds of unclassified documents released to the Australian Royal Commission will be available in the Public Record Office shortly. The list will not include those few documents which must remain classified.

As far as possible, all requests from the Royal Commission have been met. However, a small number of documents have been withheld on grounds of national security, international relations and personal sensitivity.

Nerve Gas Weapons

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have made any representations to the United States Government about the proposed manufacture by the United States of binary nerve gas weapons; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. Like the United Kingdom, the United States remains committed to the achievement of a comprehensive worldwide and verifiable ban on chemical weapons in negotiations at Geneva. They are aware of our view that the Alliance should continue as its first priority to work urgently for such an agreement. Soviet agreement to such a ban and destruction of its massive chemical weapons offensive capability would obviate the need for the United States to pursue modernisation of its limited national capability.

VE-Day (Soviet Anniversary Celebrations)

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister how Her Majesty's Government intend to respond to the invitation from the Soviet authorities for Her Majesty's Government to be represented in Moscow at the 40th anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Soviet ambassador has communicated an oral invitation to us to send a small delegation to the ceremonies in Moscow commemorating the end of the war. We asked for clarification of the nature of the events to which the delegation was being invited. Our response will be considered in the light of this clarification. We shall also be discussing these matters with our partners and allies.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Roe Deer

37. Sir Hector Monro asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions there were in 1984 for poaching roe deer.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Separate statistics are not kept for roe deer alone. However, provisional figures for 1984 show that in relation to all offences under the Deer (Scotland) Acts, 40 persons were proceeded against.

Travelling Families (Kilmarnock)

39. Mr. Lambie asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland when he next expects to meet the procurator fiscal of Kilmarnock to discuss the policy of non-harassment of travelling families.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I meet the procurator fiscal at Kilmarnock from time to time to discuss various matters, including the policy of non-harassment of travelling families. I have no special plans at present to meet the procurator fiscal to discuss this particular matter.

Drunkenness

40. Mr. Malone asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what was the number of prosecutions for offences relating exclusively to drunkenness in Aberdeen during the last 12 months, compared to the previous 12 months.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: There were only five cases in which persons were prosecuted for being drunk and incapable in Aberdeen in 1984, compared with 235 cases in 1983.

Salmon Poaching

41. Mr. Soames asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions were instituted for poaching salmon offshore in 1984.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 5 December 1984, at columns 347-48, in which I stated that between 1 December 1983 and 1 December 1984 there were 38 prosecutions for salmon poaching in the sea. No further figures are available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Lord Privy Seal what is the number of officials, and their sections, who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, and the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Biffen: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council (AIIC) according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Mr. P. G. Farley

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth may expect to secure a definitive reply to his letter dated 16 November 1984 about Mr. P. G. Farley of 84 Eastlands road, Rugby.

Sir Keith Joseph: I replied to my hon. Friend today.

Teacher Training

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the proportion of students in teacher training colleges who do not receive a qualification enabling them to apply for a teaching post in maintained schools.

Mr. Bob Dunn: Available figures suggest that, of students entering initial teacher training, around 20 per cent. on undergraduate courses and around 10 per cent. on postgraduate courses do not attain qualified teacher status at the end of the course, whether as a result of withdrawing from the course or of failing to reach the required standard. The criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training issued in April 1984 stress that institutions should seek to identify, early in the course, those students who are satisfactory academically but unsuited to teaching so as to allow for the possibility of transfer to another course and that in no case should a qualification carrying qualified teacher status be awarded to a student whose practical classroom work is unsatisfactory.

EMPLOYMENT

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of officials and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

Asbestos

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information is in the possesion of the Health and Safety Executive regarding the quantity of asbestos produced by shipbreaking operations at Cairnryan over the past five years; what quantity of asbestos waste has been recorded as deposited in an authorised dump since 1979; and what is the location of each authorised site and the quantity dumped in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive does not have information about the quantity of asbestos waste produced by shipbreaking operations at Cairnryan.

The disposal of asbestos waste is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Family Incomes

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of married families with two children and earnings of (a) £100 or less per week and (b) £120 or less per week in April 1984 distinguishing if possible between one and two-earner families.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most recent information which relates household composition, the number of persons in a household working and income, comes from the 1983 "Family Expenditure Survey".

The following table shows in percentage terms the numbers of households comprising one man, one woman and two children, with various numbers of workers and at various levels of income.

Percentage of all households comprising one man, one woman and two children with the following characteristics:

	Number of Workers†
	None	One	Two
Gross weekly household income*
Less than £100	4	3	1
Less than £120	5	6	2

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1983‡

* Comprising income from employment or self-employment, together with income from investments and social security benefits. The inputed income attributable to owner occupancy or living in rent free accommodation is also included.

† Covering both part-time and full-time employment. Also included are those temporarily absent from work and those unemployed but still seeking work (provided they were employed within the last twelve months).

Pay levels

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the latest full-time pay levels recommended by all wages councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) on 4 March 1985 at column 364.

Youth Training

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give his best estimate of the rise in youth unemployment since 1979 that can be attributed to the three factors cited in the White Paper, "Employment: The Challenge for the Nation", Cmnd. 9474, namely, the general shortage of jobs, the high relative pay of young people, and the disadvantages of those who missed the big expansion of youth training since 1983, paragraph 3.11.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 776-77]: Each of the three factors identified in paragraph 3.12 of the White Paper (Cmnd. 9474) has, singly or in combination, affected the current level of youth unemployment.

Isolating the precise individual effects of each is not possible. However, evidence is available from research carried out in my Department and elsewhere about the effects of high relative pay and the general shortage of jobs on the employment prospects of young people. There is also international evidence that high relative pay has damaged young people's employment prospects. I shall send the hon. Member the relevant references.

In relation to the third factor, those who have not benefited under the youth training scheme will be less well equipped to take up job opportunities than those who have received training or gained work experience.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the United Kingdom share of world trade in volume in each of the years 1970 to 1984; and if he will estimate the figure for each quarter from 1 January 1983.

Mr. Channon: United Kingdom shares based on 1980 prices are as follows:

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the number of officials of his Department and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Channon: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

TRANSPORT

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of officials of his Department and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

Aircraft Baggage

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to introduce regulations to require that only personal baggage which can be stowed and secured in approved storage compartments will be allowed into an aircraft cabin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: New regulations requiring baggage to be properly secured are set out in articles 2(3) and 2(10) of the Air Navigation (Fourth Amendment) Order 1985. The regulations apply to aircraft registered in the United Kingdom carrying passengers on public transport and come into operation on 26 April 1985. In the case of aircraft capable of seating more than 30 passengers, baggage must be stowed in passenger compartment stowage spaces approved by the Civil Aviation Authority. These can include under seat stowage spaces where forward restraint bars are fitted to seats.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, upon abolition of the Greater London council, London borough councils will be permitted to charge more than the administrative costs of issuing concessionary travel permits for the elderly.

Mrs. Chalker: Upon abolition of the GLC, the London borough councils will be free to organise a voluntary uniform scheme for the elderly and will be able to impose charges for issuing permits under existing powers available to the GLC and all other local authorities.

If however the statutory reserve scheme is brought into effect, the imposition of such charges will be subject to the approval of the Secretary of State. The object is to ensure that the purpose of the reserve scheme is not frustrated by any individual borough attempting to recover from its pensioners an unreasonably high proportion of the costs.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what resources his Department is providing for the working parties of borough officers looking into the effect of abolition of the Greater London council on highways and traffic matters in London.

Mrs. Chalker: All the existing resources of the Department are available for consultation and to give help to London boroughs as well as to other local authorities throughout the country on matters of common interest.

South Woodford to Barking Relief Road (Cyclists)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what special provision has been made by his Department to enable cyclists to cross the proposed South Woodford to Barking relief road.

Mrs. Chalker: Cyclists will be able to cross the relief road at all its interchanges with existing roads, including the A13 where an existing cycle track will be continued through the new junction. In addition, footbridges provided or adapted as part of the scheme at Watson Avenue, Highbridge Road, Gooseley Lane and Gascoigne Road will have stepped ramps enabling cyclists to push their machines over them. The relief road will, by reducing flows along many existing roads, make conditions on those roads safer and more pleasant for all road users.

GLC Taxicard Scheme

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the reply on 7 March, Official Report, column 585, when the future of the Greater London council's taxicard scheme is to be discussed by the working party.

Mrs. Chalker: The working party held a preliminary meeting last month and will be meeting again shortly.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those roads in urban areas that have been trunked without (a) publication of an order by him, (b) consultation with local residents and (c) the right to a public inquiry since 1971.

Mrs. Chalker: There are none.

Direction Signs

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will review direction signs, particularly those relating to tourist attractions.

Mrs. Chalker: I am pleased to announce that we have set up a review which will not only seek ways of improving signs for tourists, but also of improving the information on all directional route signs. It will also consider whether greater use can be made of variable message signs.

The review will be carried out jointly with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and will be completed within two to three years.

As part of the review, we shall be consulting and fully considering the views of associations representing local authority, police, road user and road safety interests.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Programme

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report allocations approved for each local authority in England under the urban programme phase 25.

Sir George Young: This information is not yet available. As soon as it is, I shall arrange for the full list of approvals under "Traditional Urban Programme Circular 25" to be printed in the Official Report and placed in the Library.

Litter

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any evidence that there has been an increase in the amount of litter.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no evidence that there has been any such increase in the amount of litter.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current value of plant used to develop the new airport in the Falkland Islands; what is to become of it once the job is completed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Plant to a purchase value of some £34 million is being used in the construction of the Royal Air Force and Army works projects at Mount Pleasant airport. This plant is supplied, managed and maintained by the contractors, who are also responsible for its removal when the contracts are completed.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of officials from his Department and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council (AIIC) according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

Quangos

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Waldegrave: The advice given by the committee is regularly published in its annual report. Its fifth report was published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on 4 July 1984, and copies are in the Library. The principal advice in that report was about the control of routine discharges from the Sellafield site of British Nuclear Fuels plc. In November 1984, the chairman wrote to my right hon. Friend endorsing a specific programme of works which would be consistent with the committee's previous advice. That was the programme of works announced by my right hon. Friend on 18 December 1984.

The committee's fifth report recommended the use of a common classification scheme for radioactive wastes, and this has been accepted by the Government and by the industry. It is also intended to publish a radioactive waste management information note giving a general description of the way in which my Department, and the other authorising Departments under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, control discharges of radioactivity from nuclear installations; and this will take account of the committee's general advice on this subject in its fifth report.

In September 1984 the chairman submitted the committee's view about the procedures that should be followed in investigating possible sites for new disposal facilities, and that view was accepted in the revised procedures announced by my right hon. Friend on 24

January. That statement also announced publication of the final text of "Disposal facilities on land for low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes: principles for the protection of the human environment", which incorporates the committee's comments on earlier drafts.

In November 1984 the chairman wrote to my right hon. Friend expressing regret about actions by the National Union of Seamen and the Transport and General Workers Union interfering with a research programme designed to investigate the properties of deep-sea sediments. This issue has been discussed by Ministers with the TUC.

In March 1985 the chairman wrote to my right hon. Friend summarising the committee's views on the waste management implications of the fast reactor and we shall be discussing this advice with the other Ministers concerned.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Black Country Limestone Advisory Panel submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Black Country Limestone Advisory Panel met five times between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1985. At each meeting advice was given on:

(a) the specification and conduct of my Department's commissioned research into cost-effective methods of monitoring subsidence, assessing risk and remedial measures;

(b) the appropriateness of local authority bids in 1984-85 and proposed for 1985-86 for funding of site investigations and remedial works under the derelict land grant scheme; and

(c) the conduct of investigations of five specific underground workings already under way at 1 April 1984.

In all instances my Department acted by taking note of the panel's advice when seeking further information on proposals, allocating funds and specifying research. Of 14 proposed investigations in 1984-85, further justification was sought on four and subsequently only one was rejected.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the London Housing Staff Commission submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Sir George Young: In the last year the London Housing Staff Commission has not submitted any advice direct to the Secretary of State; its main work has been in advising the London borough of Tower Hamlets and the Greater London council on the interests of staff affected by the forthcoming transfer of GLC housing in Tower Hamlets; in advising staff affected by the various transfer orders made in respect of GLC housing in 45 districts and other London boroughs; and in hearing two appeals from staff under the Greater London Housing (Staff Transfer and Protection) Order 1979.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the New Town Staff Commission submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Sir George Young: In the course of its work in safeguarding the interests of staff affected by transfer of new town housing to local authorities, the New Towns Staff Commission has made one set of representations to the Secretary of State in 1984-85, which my right hon. Friend is still considering. The commission's main work, however, has been in advising directly the new town corporations and district councils involved in the three housing transfer schemes which took effect on 1 April 1985, and the four further ones under negotiation, and in monitoring the outcome.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March each of the nine regional councils for sport and recreation submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Macfarlane: Regional councils for sport and recreation provide a forum for co-ordination and discussion of sport and recreation needs and issues in each region. Their views and advice reach my Department in various formal and informal ways, not least through the Sports Council, on whose relevant committees the regional councils are represented. This is a continuous and wide-ranging process which does not lend itself to a numerical breakdown.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Property Services Agency Advisory Board submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Sir George Young: During the 12 months period to 31 March 1985 the Property Services Agency Advisory Board submitted three formal reports to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment covering the agency's image and morale, site supervision and the board's annual report of its activities for 1984. Each of the reports and the main recommendations has been discussed with Ministers and members of the Property Services Agency executive board and action has been taken to follow through the agreed recommendations in consultation with the advisory board.

Ministers and senior management of the agency also frequently consult the advisory board informally on a variety of topics on which the board has provided valuable views and advice.

GLC (Research Library)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet able to announce his plans for the retention and administration of the Greater London council's research library and its data bases as a unit after the abolition of that authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: No decision has been taken about the future of the Greater London research library. Progress in this matter should be possible once the GLC has supplied the information requested of it under section 5 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984.

National Parks

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the report of the review of the economic efficiency of national park authorities published in 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: This review, by the management consultants, Arthur Young McClelland Moores and Co., was commissioned jointly by my Department, the Welsh Office and the Countryside Commission. It considered the level of resources available to national park authorities and the efficiency and economy with which they discharge their responsibilities towards conservation and recreation.

In general the consultant's report has shown that national park authorities are serving the public well. No evidence was found of any major shortcomings in their administrative efficiency, but the consultants identified a number of areas in which improvements might be made in all the parks as well as some where additional resources might be justified.

The report also made various recommendations for strengthening the operation of the national park supplementary grant system to improve the means of assessing national park authorities' needs and performance and of allocating grant accordingly.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I consider this to have been a valuable review and welcome the constructive report which has emerged. We believe that a positive response at both national and local level should provide a sounder basis for the promotion of national park objectives and the effective deployment of resources to the benefit of all concerned.

This has been explained in a draft circular, published today, setting out our views and explaining the substantial progress which has already been made towards implementing key parts of the report. Copies of the draft, on which comments are invited by 30 June, have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to apply section 41 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to the Broads.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following wide consultation with interested parties, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have decided that the executive area of the Broads Authority should be specified under section 41 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 with effect from today. Copies of the instrument of specification have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Letters are being sent today by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to all landowners and farmers in the Broads area affected by the decision.

Housing Stock

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he is making with assessing the condition of the local authority housing stock and the amount of expenditure required for necessary repairs and improvements to it.

Mr. Gow: The Government recognise the need to obtain up-to-date and comprehensive information on the condition of the local authority housing stock in order to assess the expenditure necessary to maintain it in a satisfactory condition. Following consultations with the local authority associations, the Department has asked local authorities to provide information on the need for repair and improvements of the houses and flats which they own and manage. The inquiry forms were issued last week and a copy of the documents sent to individual authorities has been deposited in the Library of the House. We are asking local authorities to complete and return the forms by 31 May.

The information resulting from this survey will be of value in assessing the condition of our public housing stock and the resources required to maintain and repair it. It will also be relevant to continuing discussions about the public infrastructure in the context of the National Economic Development Council. I hope that all authorities will do their best to complete the survey forms as accurately as possible.

Many authorities do not have sufficient information on the condition of their own stock. It is essential that they obtain this information if they are to manage their stock efficiently. I hope that this inquiry will encourage them to take the necessary steps to improve arrangements for regular monitoring of the condition of their housing.

North Pennine Area of Outstanding Beauty

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to hold a public inquiry into the proposed designation of the North Pennine area of outstanding natural beauty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 765]: Yes. The order made by the Countryside Commission designating a large part of the North Pennines as an area of outstanding natural beauty has attracted widespread interest and public opinion about its merits is divided. Some local authorities within the area have objected to the proposals and, having considered the arguments carefully, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has concluded that a public inquiry is the best way to proceed in this particular case.

The terms of reference for the inquiry will be as follows:

(i) Section 87(1) of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 provides that the Countryside Commission may designate, by order, an area not being a National Park as an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty if it appears to them that the area is of such outstanding natural beauty that it is desirable that the provisions relating to such areas should apply thereto;

(ii) No such order will come into operation unless and until it is submitted to, and confirmed by, the Secretary of State;

(iii) The Secretary of State, if he confirms an order, may confirm it as submitted to him or with modifications;

(iv) Before refusing to confirm an order as submitted to him or before determining to confirm it with modifications, the Secretary of State must consult with the Countryside Commission and with every local authority whose area includes any land to which the order relates.

The commission has submitted an order in respect of an area included in the North Pennines as an area of outstanding natural beauty.

In order to assist the Secretary of State in reaching the decision as to whether or not to confirm the order as submitted to him or whether to confirm it with modifications, the Secretary of State has decided to hold a public local inquiry at which a person appointed by him will hear representations and objections into the order as submitted by the commission.

A further announcement concerning the timing and location of the inquiry, which will be the first to be held into a proposed area of outstanding natural beauty, will be made as soon as possible.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the consultants used and consultancy fees paid by the London Docklands Development Corporation in 1984-85 financial year.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 761]: LDDC policy is to keep its core of permanent staff as small as possible and to supplement their work with external private sector skills wherever necessary. Payments were made to the following consultants by LDDC during 1984-85:

These consultants have undertaken assignments ranging from a few hundred to several hundred thousand pounds. It would be a breach of commercial confidentiality to give the fees paid to each consultant but, in total, the corporation estimates that within its total programme of projects £6 million has been paid to engineering and quantity surveying consultants. About £3·6 million has been paid to consultants for project management and other administration.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs and Excise (Personal Information)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the number of persons for whom personal data are held on the Customs and Excise departmental reference and information computer, indentifying the number of these who are (a) British nationals and (b) convicted persons.

Mr. Hayhoe: 109,700. The major part of the information about persons was converted from manual records. The number of (a) British nationals and (b) convicted persons was not converted and is not available without a disproportionate use of resources.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the performance and efficiency of the Customs and Excise departmental reference and information computer; and whether any plan to replace or improve this computer system are being considered.

Mr. Hayhoe: Customs and Excise is satisfied now that initial teething troubles have been overcome and there are no plans to replace or improve the system.

Marriage (Financial Disincentives)

Mr. Hill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in his proposed review of personal taxation, he will recommend the removal of financial disincentives to marriage by equalising the position of married and unmarried individuals in respect of mortgage interest relief and capital taxes.

Mr. Moore: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response the Treasury has received from the Electricity Supply Trade Union Council to the proposals for amending the statutes of nationalised industries; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: The Treasury has received a copy of the comments which the Electricity Supply Trade Union Council sent the Secretary of State for Energy on 28 March. These comments will be considered along with others which have been received.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his Budget calculations of net revenue changes from alterations in employers' national insurance contributions included the public sector.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 37]: The figures of £30 million in 1985-86 and £80 million in a full year shown in the Financial Statement and Budget Report are the estimated direct net effects of the proposed changes on the total of employers' national insurance contributions. About two thirds of the net reduction in contributions is estimated to relate to the private sector; the remainder relates to the public sector.

Family Income

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answers to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) of 6 February 1984, Official Report, columns 439-42 and 15 February 1984, Official Report, columns 203-4, concerning income statistics to show net earnings at the lowest decile, median and highest decile of the earnings distribution for each year since 1978 for different household types, using constant April 1984 prices; and whether he will also give the same information for the following additional household types (a) a married couple with two children, where one partner works full-time and the other part-time and (b) a married couple with both partners in full-time work.

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide information on the net income after income tax, national insurance contributions and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) equivalent 1984-85 prices of typical household units (i) single, (ii) married couple, (iii) married couple with two children and (iv) married couple with four children, whose earnings from work are equivalent to the following points on the male earnings distribution (1) lowest decile, (2) median and (3) highest decile for each year since April 1978.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 1 March 1985, c. 329-32 and 29 March 1985, c. 370-72]: I regret that figures for April 1984 were incorrectly given. Corrected figures are as follows.

Information in the following tables is based on estimates of earnings for those in full-time work paid at adult rates, with pay unaffected by absence. Estimates are based on information from the new earnings surveys.

Income tax rates and allowances for April 1979 are those specified in the Finance Act 1979, later replaced by those announced in June 1979; for other Aprils, they are the rates and allowances for the financial year immediately following. Taxpayers are assumed to have no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowance. National insurance contributions are at the contracted-in rate.

The calculations take no account of means-tested benefits to which those at the lowest decile may be entitled. Changes in the purchasing power of net earnings have been calculated by reference to movements in the general index of retail prices between Aprils.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Car Parks

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the car parks still run by the Northern Ireland Department of the Environment; and when he intends either to privatise them or to hand them over to district councils.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Northern Ireland Department of the Environment's off-street car parks are listed in part I of the schedule to the Off-Street Parking Bye-laws (Northern Ireland) 1983 (SRNI 1983 No. 240) as amended to date. Of these, 30 in the Belfast area are operated by contractors.

The Department is currently considering the case for contracting out to the private sector the operation of a number of car parks which are subject to charge in the main provincial towns in Northern Ireland.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of officials of his Department and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Hurd: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernment Council (AIIC) according to the subjects under discussion. It is not our practice to give information about meetings of officials.

"Police Complaints and Discipline"

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make available to the House copies of the consultative paper "Police Complaints and Discipline"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have arranged for copies of the paper to be placed in the Library of the House. The paper sets out the Government's proposals for revising police complaints and discipline procedures in Northern Ireland, and I look forward to receiving comments on the proposals by 14 June.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether parity is being maintained between the job release schemes in Northern Ireland and Great Britain.

Dr. Boyson: Participants in the Northern Ireland full and part-time job release schemes will continue to receive allowances at the rates payable, in corresponding circumstances, under the parallel schemes in Great Britain. As from 8 April 1985 the new rates are as follows:

Full-Time Scheme

For disabled men aged 60, 61, 62 and 63 (and for men who have joined the scheme at ages 62 and 63) who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £71.15 a week, taxable; for all others: £58.35 a week, taxable. For women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £63 a week, tax free; for all others: £49.95 a week, tax free.

Part-Time Scheme

For disabled men aged 60 and 61 and men aged 62 and 63 who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £40.70 a week taxable; for all others: £33.80 a week, taxable. For women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £35.55 a week, tax free; for all others: £28.95 a week, tax free. The new part-time scheme rates include a supplement of £4, to make the scheme more attractive to employees.

The changes made in the Great Britain part-time job release scheme will also be introduced in Northern Ireland with effect from 29 April 1985. For the first time, a grant of £840 will be payable to an employer supporting a successful application under the part-time job release scheme. The main changes are: to remove the restriction preventing individuals moving from the part-time scheme to the full-time scheme and to simplify the application procedure and the current rules, particularly those covering the hours to be given up by the employee. The revised scheme is designed to help create more jobs for unemployed people, to encourage changes in working patterns, and to make the scheme more attractive to employees.

SCOTLAND

Salmon Tagging

11. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will be bringing forward his plans for salmon tagging.

Mr. John MacKay: As I indicated when replying to a question on this subject from my hon. Friend on 15 February there are a number of difficulties associated with the introduction of a tagging scheme, which we are still considering. We are not yet in a position to announce our conclusions on this proposal.

Irvine New Town

12. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he is going to pay an official visit to Irvine new town.

Mr. Younger: I have at present no plans to pay an official visit there.

Scottish Examination Board

14. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Scottish Examination Board to discuss the progress of new examination development.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I last met the chairman of the Scottish Examination Board on 7 February and the Scottish Education Department keeps in close touch with the board on all matters relating to school examinations.

Labour Statistics

15. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the present level of unemployment in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The total number unemployed in Scotland in March 1985 was 351,900. Reduction in unemployment depends on Scottish industry's ability to take advantage of the favourable economic climate which the Government have created. The Government have, however, given immediate help to the long term unemployed by increasing community programme places, and the proposed expansion of YTS will benefit school leavers.

Housing Revaluation

16. Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received regarding the 1985 revaluation; and of these, how many express approval and how many express disapproval.

Mr. Ancram: Nearly all of some 9,000 representations —of which some 2,500 have been letters—which my right hon. Friend and I have received about rates and revaluation express varying degrees of concern about the 1985 revaluation.

Budget (Job Creation)

17. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of jobs likely to be created in Scotland as a result of the measures announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his recent Budget speech.

Mr. Younger: The continued recovery in the Scottish economy reflects the success of the Government's economic strategy. Within that framework the measures announced my my right hon. Friend for changes in the structure of national insurance contributions, tax reductions and the expansion of employment and training should be particularly helpful in establishing new jobs.

33. Mr. Gourlay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has made of the consequences on job and industrial investment prospects in Scotland of the recent Budget proposals.

Mr. Younger: The Budget will help to create the conditions for faster economic growth, and this will lead to new jobs and investment. In particular new jobs are expected to result from the restructuring of national insurance contributions and from tax reductions. The expansion, in employment and training measures will provide opportunities for the young and the long term unemployed.

Tourist Industry

18. Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he is next due to meet the chairman of the Scottish tourist board to discuss the current state of the tourist industry in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State meets the chairman of the Scottish tourist board whenever it seems to him necessary or desirable. They last met on 22 March 1985; and will meet again later this week while participating in the "Gateway Scotland" mission to the United States.

Blairgowrie, Pitlochry and Aberfeldy

19. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many recent representations he has received about the employment situation in Blairgowrie, Pitlochry and Aberfeldy.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Since last December seven letters have been received about the employment situation in the Blairgowrie, Pitlochry and Aberfeldy area. There have also been a number of letters about the Blairgowrie, and Pitlochry travel-to-work area.

Teachers (Pay)

20. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives from the Educational Institute of Scotland to discuss their campaign for an independent pay review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the replies which my right hon. Friend and I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) and the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan).

Young Persons (Glasgow)

21. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of unemployed young people in the Glasgow eastern area renewal area; how many are on temporary job schemes; what percentage of the young population of the area those totals represent; and how many vacancies are available to them in the careers offices in the Glasgow eastern area renewal area.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Unemployment figures are not compiled for the Glasgow eastern area renewal area of Glasgow. However, at 10 January 1985, the latest date for which the information is available, there were 1,251 unemployed claimants aged 16-17 in the areas covered by the Parkhead and Glasgow central jobcentres, within which the GEAR area is located.

Unemployment percentage rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas and then not by age. The Glasgow travel-to-work area, within which the GEAR area lies, had an unemployment rate of 17·7 per cent. at 10 January 1985.

Information about the number of young people in the GEAR area on the full range of temporary job schemes is not available: in particular figures for the young workers scheme are compiled only at the all Scotland level. There are currently some 10 participants in the training and employment grants scheme in the GEAR area. The number of approved places, similarly, for the youth training scheme, which is of course a training measure, is 974.

For the month of March 1985 the number of unfilled vacancies at the Glasgow Bridgeton and Parkhead careers offices, which also hold vacancies for outwith the GEAR area, was 37. Jobcentres in the locality will also carry some vacancies for which young people would be eligible.

Teachers (Pay Dispute)

22. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the teachers' dispute.

Mr. Younger: I refer the right hon. Member to the replies which the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Argyll and Bute (Mr. MacKay) and I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) and the hon. Members for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) and Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang).

Agricultural Capital Grants

23. Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about cuts in capital grants in agriculture in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: Representations have been received from a number of hon. Members, from the National Farmers Union of Scotland, the Highlands and Islands Development Board, the Orkney and Shetland Islands Councils and some 10 community councils in Shetland and from a number of individual farmers, agricultural contractors and other organisations.

Job Creation

24. Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has introduced to alleviate unemployment in Lanarkshire in the last 12 months.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government's strategy, re-emphasised in the Budget statement, is designed to keep inflation down and to offer real incentive for enterprise. This is the best means of improving employment prospects in all parts of the United Kingdom, including Lanarkshire. The full range of the Manpower Services Commission's special employment and training measures is available in Lanarkshire on a continuing basis. In addition, during the last 12 months, Lanarkshire has benefited from the following Scottish Development Agency projects: 35 new or refit factory building projects, valued at £5·85 million; 52 land engineering projects, valued at £3·15 million; 19 cases of aid to small businesses, valued at approximately £4·1 thousand; further aid to the New Lanark project, valued at £59·0 thousand.

Educational Standards

25. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to have a meeting with the Educational Institute of Scotland to discuss educational standards in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so. It is unlikely that any meaningful discussion could be held against the background of the Educational Institute of Scotland's continuing policy of disruptive industrial action which is affecting in particular reforms of the curriculum and of assessment which are designed to improve educational standards.

Manufacturing Industry

26. Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs, full-time and part-time, there are now in manufacturing industry in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The numbers of Employees in manufacturing in Scotland in September 1984 are provisionally estimated to have been 408,000 in full-time employment and 28,000 in part-time employment.

Farm Advisory Service

27. Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on the proposed reduction in funding for the Farm Advisory Service.

Mr. John Mackay: Representations have been received from a number of organisations and individuals expressing concern about the proposed reduction in the funding of the advisory service provided by the Scottish agricultural colleges.

Strathclyde Region (Policing)

28. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the leader of Strathclyde regional council to discuss policing within the Strathclyde region.

Mr. Michael Ancram: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting.

Sports Facilities

29. Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources his Department has made available for the development of sports facilities in Springburn in the last five years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Glasgow district council's capital allocation under the general services block (including enhancement for the building of the Burrell Gallery in 1980-81 to 1982-83) is as follows:

	Net Allocation	Allocation (including Capital Reciepts)	Expenditure
1980-81	11,000	11,675	12,622
1981-82	9,400	14,960	13,294
1982-83	8,070	18,298	17,625
1983-84	5,100	9,997	8,881
1984-85	4,050	7,566	n/a

It is for the district council to decide how much of its allocation to spend on sports facilities and on the priority to be given to projects in Springburn.

European Music Year

30. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is being done by his Department to celebrate European Music Year in Scotland in 1985.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Support for European Music Year is being given from a variety of sources, but is not primarily a matter for the Scottish Education Department.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

31. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the main proposals in the report of the Scottish Affairs Committee on the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. John MacKay: The recommendations made by the Committee are being given careful consideration by Ministers and the Highlands and Islands Development Board. The Government's views will be made known in due course.

Forestry

32. Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much land has been planted for forestry in the last three years and what proportion has been planted in hardwoods.

Mr. Younger: The information is as follows:

Year to 31 March	Area of New Planting (Hectares)	Proportion Planted with Hardwoods
1983	21,666	3 per cent.
1984	25,315	3 per cent.

The complete figures for the year ended 31 March 1985 are not yet available.

Royal Cornhill Hospital, Aberdeen

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Grampian health board's plans for developments at the site of the Royal Cornhill hospital, Aberdeen.

Mr. John MacKay: Grampian health board has recently provided the Scottish Home and Health Department with further information about its proposals for redeveloping the Royal Cornhill hospital to provide 594 beds in new buildings and 120 beds in existing buildings at an estimated cost of £16 million. These proposals are being carefully considered in the light of this information, and a formal response will be made as soon as possible.

Rates

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the product of the 1p rate, in respect of each local authority area in Scotland as at 1 April.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

Notes:

1. Actual penny rate product is calculated by each authority in the terms of the Local Government (Rate Product) (Scotland) Regulations 1975, as amended.

2. Standard penny rate product is the product of population and the national standard amount, which is the level to which local rating resources (actual penny rate product) are brought through payment of resources element of rate support grant. In the few cases where no resources element is paid the standard penny rate product is below the actual penny rate product.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the cost of local government services in Scotland will be paid by domestic and commercial ratepayers respectively, in the coming year, and what were the comparable proportions in 1978.

Mr. Ancram: On the basis of information in "Rating Review", domestic ratepayers financed 15 per cent. of local authority revenue expenditure and commercial ratepayers 9 per cent. in 1977-78, the year before the last revaluation, the corresponding figures for 1978-79 being 12 per cent. and 9 per cent. Provisional estimates for 1985-86 are 18 per cent. and 14 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in the clothing industry have been created and how many have been lost in each year since May 1979 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information based on the annual census of production relates to the number of employees in employment in the clothing, hats and gloves industry (Group 453 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) in Scotland. The following table shows the estimated net estimated net annual changes in thousands to each mid-year.

Estimates for 1983 and 1984 are not yet available.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in the food industry have been created and how many have been lost in each year since May 1979 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is based on the annual census of production and relates to the number of employees in employment in the food industry (Groups 411 to 423 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) in Scotland. The following table shows the estimated net annual changes in thousands to each mid-year.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in the high technology industries have been created and how many have been lost in each year since May 1979 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is not available, as there is no accepted definition of high technology industry.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in the construction industry have been created and how many have been lost in each year since May 1979 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information based on estimates prepared by the Department of Employment relates to the number of employees in employment in the construction industry (Division 5 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) in Scotland. Epilepsy

Mr. Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will itemise the research into epilepsy currently being funded or sponsored by his Department; and what are the amounts of money involved.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Home and Health Department does not currently fund research into epilepsy but is prepared to entertain for support through the Chief Scientist Organisation any proposal which has scientific merit.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on present relations between Turkey and the European Economic Community.

Mr. Rifkind: The 1963 European Community/Turkey Association Agreement forms the basis for economic relations between Turkey and the Community. Apart from its provisions relating to trade and other forms of co-operation, the Agreement has, through a series of separate financial protocols, provided substantial Community development aid to Turkey. This aid was suspended in 1980 as a result of concern among member states about political developments in Turkey.

We, together with most other member states, believe that the Community should revert to a more normal relationship with Turkey, starting with the unblocking on a step-by-step basis on some of the outstanding aid suspended in 1980. This would reflect the progress Turkey has made since then in restoring democracy and give encouragement to the efforts now being made to improve human rights.

Anglo-Irish Economic Steering Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates and locations of all the meetings of the Anglo-Irish Economic Steering Group since May 1979; and if he will indicate what subjects were discussed and the Departments which were represented in each case.

Mr. Renton: The only meeting of the group since May 1979 took place in Dublin in March 1980. Officials attended from the Departments most involved in the discussions. It is not practice of Her Majesty's Government to give detailed information about meetings of officials.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is given by Her Majesty's Government to serving members of the public service of Zimbabwe with entitlement to registration as British citizens who wish to retire on pension plus gratuity and to settle in the United Kingdom but who are prevented by Zimbabwean legislation from taking capital out of the country.

Mr. Rifkind: The Zimbabwean constitution protects the pension rights of public officers; it also contains provisions which guarantee the remittability of all pensions, although the remittability of commutations may be subject to restrictions. In addition to certain special allowances, capital may be taken out of the country over a number of years under the Zimbabwean Government's 4 per cent. external bond scheme. Zimbabwe's exchange controls are a matter of internal economic policy in which we have no formal standing. We have repeatedly impressed upon the Zimbabwean authorities the hardship which their controls can cause, and urged that as their foreign exchange position improves greater flexibility be exercised, particularly for those in most need.

Iranian Embassy (Staff)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) why the Islamic Republic of Iran has been permitted to increase the number of administrative and technical staff in post at its embassy from six on 25 May 1984 to eight on 14 February 1985;

(2) why the Islamic Republic of Iran has been permitted to increase the size of its consulate-general in Manchester from 10 on 24 May 1984 to 13 on 14 February 1985;

(3) why the diplomatic staff of the Islamic Republic of Iran has been permitted to increase from 13 on 14 May 1984 to 15 as of 14 February 1985; and what are the specific duties of Mr. Teherani and Mr. Esfahlani which required their accreditation in that period.

Mr. Luce: The diplomatic and administrative and technical staff in the Iranian embassy* has increased since May, 1984 from 23 to 27 and the locally engaged staff of the consulate-general from six to nine. The level of Iran's diplomatic representation is kept under close and continuous review. Permission to increase the number of staff has only been given where we have been satisfied that it was justified by official requirement. It is understood that Mr. Teherani is engaged on the administration of the embassy's property and accounts and that Mr. Esfahlani is engaged on political affairs.

* And the consulate-general in Manchester.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the number of officials and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Renton: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council according to the subjects under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

Council of Europe (Human Genetics)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the cost of maintaining the United Kingdom representatives at the Council of Europe ad hoc committee of experts on ethical and legal problems relating to human genetics;

(2) who are the United Kingdom representatives on the Council of Europe ad hoc committee of experts on ethical and legal problems relating to human genetics; and on what basis each of these representatives was appointed;

(3) what is the purpose of the Council of Europe ad hoc committee of experts on ethical and legal problems relating to human genetics.

Mr. Rifkind: The ad hoc committee on ethical and legal problems relating to human genetics was set up by the Council of Europe and held its first meeting in December 1983. Its purpose as defined in its present terms of reference is to study the consequences, from the ethical, legal, social and biosafety aspects, of the use of techniques deriving from developments in human genetics, molecular genetics, cell biology and embryology, with a view of harmonising the policies of the member states as far as possible, and if desirable, to frame appropriate legal instruments. The main emphasis of the work is on the sharing of national experience and the identification of legal and ethical issues on which harmonisation of procedures in member states of the Council of Europe might be desirable. The United Kingdom experts are chosen according to the agenda of each meeting of the ad hoc committee. Mr. B. P. Ager, Health and Safety Executive attended the first meeting; Dr. K. Gibson, Medical Research Council, the second; Dr. J. S. Metters of the Department of Health and Social Security, previously joint secretary of the Warnock committee of inquiry into human fertilization and embryology, and Dr. E. Moutrie also of the Department of Health and Social Security represented the United Kingdom at the third and most recent meeting of the Committee.

The cost of one representative to each meeting is met from the Council of Europe budget. The cost of the second representative (where necessary) is met by the sponsoring Department—currently the Department of Health and Social Security. The cost of attendance at a four-day meeting is approximately £400.

Spain (Extradition Treaty)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he now expects to announce an extradition treaty between Spain and the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Negotiations for the conclusion of a new extradition treaty with Spain are at an advanced stage and it is expected that agreement will shortly be reached on the final text.

Sudan

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the new Sudanese Government of General Inwar Dahab and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom has long enjoyed close and friendly relations with the Government and people of Sudan and we hope that these will continue. We are closely studying recent developments. Her Majesty's ambassador in Khartoum has already had two useful meetings with General Sowar el Dahab.

VE Day

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance has been given to British embassies abroad regarding the commemoration of VE Day; and if he will make a statement on plans so far made.

Mr. Rifkind: Her Majesty's embassies and high commissions have been informed of our plans for a national commemoration in the United Kingdom and approach to events abroad. The Ministry of Defence press release 15/85 of 9 April outlines details of our national commemoration. A copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

Indonesia

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Indonesia.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom enjoys good relations with Indonesia which have been further strengthened by my right Friend the Prime Minister's visit from 9-11 April and by the full range of discussions she had with President Soeharto and senior Indonesian Ministers.

Singapore

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Singapore.

Mr. Luce: We have close and cordial relations with Singapore.

Chemical Weapons Negotiations

Mr. Churchill asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further initiatives he intends to take to contribute to the Geneva chemical weapons negotiations.

Mr. Luce: On 17 April the leader of the United Kingdom delegation to the Geneva conference on disarmament tabled the latest in a series of working papers on the proposed chemical weapons convention. Earlier British proposals, the most recent of which I introduced at Geneva on 12 March, have addressed the harder issues of verification, in particular the non-diversion of certain industrial chemicals into secret military stockpiles.

The latest paper proposes the establishment of an effective executive body (the "Executive Council") empowered to take rapidly whatever action is necessary to ensure that existing stockpiles of weapons are destroyed, once the convention enters into force, and that doubts about compliance with the provisions of the convention are rapidly resolved. The paper also addresses other important institutional issues. These latest proposals are a further demonstration of the urgency we attach to reaching agreement on this important disarmament issue. I am arranging for a copy of the paper to be placed in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the anticipated expenditure in 1985 on each farm product under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: The 1985 budget has not yet been adopted. In the Commission's latest budget proposals expenditure by product for 1985 from the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund is estimated as follows:

	mecu
Cereals and rice	2,415
Sugar	1,689
Olive oil	897
Oilseeds	938
Protein plants	272
Textile plants and silkworms	213
Fresh fruit and vegetables	488
Processed fruit and vegetables	868
Wine	998
Tobacco	841
Other products	54
Milk and milk products	6,602
Beef	2,460
Sheepmeat	451
Pigmeat	163
Eggs and poultry	124
Non-annex II products	402
Monetary compensatory amounts	110

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many officials of his Department, and from which sections, have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, giving the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Jopling: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

Quangos

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mrs. Fenner: The consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis met on three occasions during the 12 months ending 31 March and on each occasion submitted advice to my Department on a wide range of issues. Advice from the panel has played a key part in shaping departmental research and operational work on badgers and bovine tuberculosis and the review of policy in this area. Details of the principal actions taken by the Department are published in the Ministry's annual reports on bovine tuberculosis in badgers and in press notices.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the steering group on food surveillance submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mrs. Fenner: The steering group on food surveillance has a wide range of responsibilities including recommendations of programmes of work necessary to ensure that the food intake of the population is wholesome, safe and nutritious. Research recommended by the steering group in the year to 31 March 1985 is included in my department's national programme of food research and development for 1985-86. The steering group also submits regular reports of its activities, and I authorised the publication of their progress report 1984 during the period referred to, and this was published in November 1984.

This report contains an account of the steering group's recent activities including investigations into veterinary residues, heavy metals, chemical contaminants from food contact materials, natural toxicants, nutrients, pesticide residues, food colours, and nitrate and related compounds in the food chain.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March each of the five regional panels for the farming industry submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mr. Jopling: The regional panels provide a continuous two-way communication link between the farming industry and my Department. They regularly consider matters of concern to the industry and their meetings are attended by my chief regional officers and generally by regional heads of the ADAS services. My ministerial colleagues and I meet the chairmen of the panels together twice a year and also attend some panel meetings. I value the panels as providing an independent contribution, by people of standing in agriculture, to my consideration of issues affecting the industry.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the National Food Survey Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mrs. Fenner: The National Food Survey Committee met once in the 12 months to 31 March 1985. The committee considered the results of the survey in 1983 and the content of its annual report which will be published shortly. The committee also advised on proposed changes in coverage and methodology of the survey. The advice provided by the committee has been accepted by my Department and the recommendations are being implemented.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Agricultural Statistics Consultative Committee submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mrs. Fenner: During the 12 months to 31 March 1985 the Agricultural Statistics Consultative Committee has given advice to the Ministry on four subjects. As a result of this advice improvements were made to the questionnaires used in the farm surveys on irrigation, on English wine and on environmental topics on farms. Also the committee provided substantial evidence and advice on the recent major review of cereals surveys: this was given full weight in the final report which is now being implemented.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the 12 months to 31 March the Committee on Agricultural Valuation submitted advice to his Department; and what action was taken by his Department on each occasion as a result of the advice given.

Mrs. Fenner: The Committee on Agricultural Valuation is set up in accordance with the requirements of section 79 of the Agricultural Holdings Act 1948 (as amended). It advises my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and myself on matters to be included in regulations on the calculation of the payment of compensation to outgoing tenants of agricultural land for short-term improvements they have made to the land. This committee does not need to meet frequently and its last meeting was in February 1984. My right hon. Friend and I are currently consulting the industry about possible changes to the way in which these complex calculations are made. This follows a recommendation by a working group of this committee which met in October 1984.

Milk Producers

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those member countries of the European Economic Community in which no comprehensive list of milk producers exists.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 26]: Member states use lists of milk producers for various different purposes (co-responsibility, supplementary levy, milk and dairy hygiene) All member states are required to keep records of producers who deliver milk to dairies for the purpose of co-responsibility levy (except in the mountainous areas). For milk quota purposes member states also need to maintain records of these producers making direct sales of milk or milk products. Complete information on the ways in which such lists are compiled and held is not readily available.

DEFENCE

Combined Services School of Music, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of representations made to him with regard to the siting of the Combined Services School of Music at Portsmouth.

Mr. Lee: Approaches were made by my right hon. and learned Friend, the Member for Dover (Mr. Rees) and my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel), both expressing constituency interests. Two other Members asked for information relating to the choice of Deal. Portsmouth city council expressed disappointment at our choice and inquired about the future of the Royal Marines establishment at Eastney. A member of the general public wrote to protest at the decision to locate the Defence School of Music at Deal. An Adjournment debate on the subject took place on 29 March 1985.

We have also received a number of representations about the closure of Kneller Hall, and an Adjournment debate on that subject took place on 25 October 1983.

Low Frequency Communications System

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to conduct an environmental impact assessment in the event of a decision being made to develop an extremely low frequency communications system.

Mr. Lee: The Ministry of Defence will consult the relevant planning authority under establish procedures. If it is decided to proceed with the development of an operational ELF communications system, every effort would be made to minimise the effect on the environment.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce a decision on the develoment of an extremely low frequency communications system; and when a decision will be taken on its location.

Mr. Lee: A decision on the development of an operational ELF communication system cannot be taken until the present technology demonstrator programme has been completed and its results evaluated. Consideration of possible sites remains at an early stage.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 182, whether the naval requirement for an extremely low frequency communications transmitter in mainland Scotland is a United States naval requirement or a Royal Naval requirement.

Mr. Lee: The present requirement is for a technology demonstrator programme. Should that lead to a requirement for an operation system, it would be for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether joint use by the United States Navy and Royal Navy is envisaged for the extremely low frequency communications transmitter currently under investigation by his Department.

Mr. Lee: Present studies are concerned with potential national requirements but, should we proceed to an operational system, we should certainly be prepared to consider any proposals for use of the system by the United States or other Allied navies.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent so far by his Department on the feasibility study of extremely low frequency communications.

Mr. Lee: Approximately £350,000 has so far been spent on research into extra low frequency communications.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total cost of developing and constructing an extremely low frequency communications transmitter in Scotland for naval use.

Mr. Lee: The cost of developing and constructing an ELF communications system cannot be realistically estimated at this stage.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations his Department has carried out into the potential environmental and biological hazards of exposure to extremely low frequency radio waves.

Mr. Lee: Extensive research carried out in the United States of America has confirmed that ELF radiation at the levels envisaged does not represent a hazard to humans or animals in the vicinity of the transmitting aerials. My Department has studied this research and found no reason why the installation being considered for the United Kingdom should represent any environmental or biological hazard. The technology demonstrator programme will include continued investigation of potential environmental effects.

Chemical Warfare

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence which senior United Kingdom officials met members of the United States presidential review commission on chemical warfare at the end of March.

Mr. Stanley: The senior officials concerned were from the Ministry of Defence and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. A senior official from the Cabinet Office attended as an observer.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any proposals were made by the United States presidential review commission on chemical warfare when it met senior United Kingdom officials at the end of March.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Chemical Weapons (Storage)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether there are any facilities for storing chemical weapons at United State bases, or bases where facilities are shared with United States forces in Great Britain;

(2) whether there are any plans to store United States chemical weapons in Great Britain.

Mr. Stanley: There are no such facilities being used or designated for this purpose, nor are there plans to store United States chemical weapons in Great Britain.

RAF Trainer Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the Royal Air Force trainer Tucano will first fly with the Garrett TPE 331 engine.

Mr. Butler: A prototype Shorts Tucano with the Garrett engine is expected to undergo some flight testing by Shorts towards the end of 1985. Flight testing by the Aeroplane and Armament Experimental Establishment, Boscombe Down, will take place in about a year, as my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement stated in his reply on 29 March, at column 389.

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence what deadline was given to the various companies for the final bid for the new Royal Air Force trainer.

Mr. Lee: The deadline for offers from four companies was set at 31 January 1985. For subsequent negotiations related to the most attractive bids, from Shorts and British Aerospace, a deadline was set at midday, Thursday 14 March 1985.

Naval Vessels (Disposal)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many naval vessels have been disposed of to Queenborough at Cairnryan or its predecessors for breaking up.

Mr. Lee: Since 1970, 11 ex-naval vessels have been sold to Ship-breaking (Queenborough) Ltd. for breaking up for scrap at Cairnryan. Two ex-aircraft carriers, HMS Eagle and HMS Ark Royal, were also broken up at Cairnryan by H. R. Vickers Ltd. and Steel Supply Company Ltd. respectively, which used the premises of Queenborough because their own facilities were not large enough. No records are available for the period prior to 1970.

Buoyant Cable Antennae

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there is any projected threat of Soviet ability to detect the towed buoy or buoyant cable antennae used by Royal Navy submarines.

Mr. Lee: No. Detection by Soviet ocean surveillance techniques projected at least a decade ahead is most unlikely.

Very Low Frequency Communications System

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent so far on the current upgrading of Britain's very low frequency communications system; and what is the estimated total cost of this project.

Mr. Lee: A programme to improve the United Kingdom's very low frequency communications system is in progress. A total of £1·7 million has been spent on it to date, out of an estimated total procurement cost of some £22 million.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether there are any plans to install receivers for extremely low frequency communications on the new Upholder class submarines;

(2) whether there are any plans to install receivers for extremely low frequency communications on Trafalgar class submarines;

(3) whether there are any plans to install receivers for extremely low frequency communications on the Royal Navy's Trident submarines.

Mr. Lee: Extra low frequency communications have potential application to Royal Navy submarines generally. No decisions have been taken on which classes of submarine might be equipped with ELF receivers.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current cost of transporting troops to the Falkland Islands; and under what section of the Government's White paper on expenditure, Cmnd. 9428, it is accounted for;

(2) what savings will accrue in the cost of transporting troops to the Falkland Islands from the completion of the runway at Mount Pleasant; and when such savings will begin.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with British Airways concerning the transportation of troops to the Falkland Islands; what will be the cost charged by British Airways; if his Department will meet all such costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Discussions with British Airways are being concluded for the award of a six-month contract for the carriage of passengers and freight by wide-bodied aircraft to Mount Pleasant airport from next month. It is not the practice to disclose the cost of individual contracts for reasons of commercial confidentiality. The costs of the contract will be met by the Ministry of Defence.

Chemical Warfare

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any proposals were made by the United States presidential review commission on chemical warfare when it met senior United Kingdom officials at the end of March.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 16th April 1985]: No. The commission's proposals had still to be formulated and will, of course, be submitted to the President of the United States.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Sickle Cell Disease

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give additional assistance to health authorities to enable them to improve facilities for screening patients for antibodies against human parvovirus who suffer from sickle cell disease and complain of joint pain.

Mr. John Patten: There is no evidence that the facilities for screening patients for antibodies against human parvovirus are inadequate. However, if screening of those who suffer from sickle cell disease and complain of joint pain were to lead to an increase in demand for laboratory facilities, their provision would be a matter for individual health authorities, based on a knowledge of local circumstances and priorities. A service for the detection of antibodies to human parvovirus is available through the Public Health Laboratory Service and through some university departments.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the number of deaths associated with solvent abuse in 1984 and give a breakdown between different medical causes of death.

Mr. John Patten: Final figures for 1984 are not yet available. I shall write to my hon. Friend when the total number of confirmed cases is known.

Legal Aid

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the result of his urgent consideration of the promulgation of illegal instructions in the L code concerning legal aid assessment.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 16 April, at column 164.

National No-Smoking Day

Mr. Porter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether public funds were spent on letting off 10,000 black helium-filled balloons in Covent Garden on 20 March as part of the National No-Smoking Day campaign.

Mr. John Patten: The National No-Smoking Day campaign is supported financially by a wide variety of commercial and public bodies including the Health Education Council, which is funded by the Department. Some of the other supporting voluntary organisations are in receipt of Government grants.

Fluoridation Society

Mr. Body asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, for each year, how much public money he has given to date to the Fluoridation Society under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

Mr. John Patten: Annual grants have been made to the Fluoridation Society since 1974 under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 as follows:

1974-75	4,500
1975-76	4,500
1976-77	5,500
1977-78	5,500
1978-79	5,500
1979-80	5,500
1980-81	11,000
1981-82	14,000
1982-83	15,000
1983-84	15,000
1984-85	15,000

Geriatric Beds

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many geriatric beds there are in each health region of England at present; and what were the corresponding figures in May 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The requested information for 1983, the latest available year, and for 1979 is given in the table.

Average daily number of available beds in departments of geriatric medicine in National Health Service hospitals in England

Region	1979	1983

North-West Kidney Lifeline Scheme

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the North-West Kidney Lifeline scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have received a letter from the chairman of the North-West Kidney Lifeline scheme, and three letters from right hon. and hon. Members. I also refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 28 March, at column 305.

A meeting between the chairman of the scheme and officials of the Department has been arranged.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many, and what percentage of those unemployed in the Coventry travel-to-work area, are claiming supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: At November 1983 (the latest figures available) there were 21,400 unemployed claimants in the area covered by Coventry unemployment benefit offices, including the office in Leamington, in receipt of supplementary benefit. This was 67 per cent. of the total number of unemployment benefit claimants in the area.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list showing, by social security regions, for each year since 1981 (a) the number of recipients of supplementary benefit and (b) the number of recipients of supplementary benefit on long-term scale rates.

Mr. Whitney: The total number of recipients of supplementary benefit in each social security region in February of each year since 1981 was as follows:

Northern	230,861
Yorkshire and Humberside	333,760
East Midlands and East Anglia	300,149
West Midlands	344,954
London North	322,660

London North	796,680
London South	701,642
Wales and South West	628,491
North Western	747,081
Scotland	506,680

Social security regions were reduced from a total of 12 in 1981 to eight in 1983 and to seven in 1984.

Figures for the number of recipients of supplementary benefit on long-term scale rates by social security regions could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Vacancies (Coventry)

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many posts have been frozen unfilled in the Coventry health authority; how many vacancies currently exist; and what steps are being taken to fill them.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect this sort of detailed local information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to seek information from the chairman of the Coventry health authority.

Board and Lodging Allowance

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants under 26 years in (a) Birkenhead and (b) Merseyside currently draw board and lodging allowance.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested for Birkenhead and Merseyside could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Smoking-related Illness

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost to the National Health Service in each of the last five years of treating (a) acute and (b) chronic conditions caused by smoking.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. The most recent estimate of the overall cost to the National Health Service of diseases to which smoking is a major contributory factor is £170 million per annum.

Radiation Dose Limits

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ask the National Radiological Protection Board to review urgently the existing radiation dose limits with a view to reducing them.

Mr. John Patten: The National Radiological Protection Board has been directed by Ministers to advise Government Departments and statutory bodies on the acceptability of and application in the United Kingdom of radiation protection standards recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) and other international bodies. It therefore reviews its advice on maximum permissible doses as and when necessary in the light of recommendation by the ICRP. This is the body recognised internationally as responsible for recommending values of maximum permissible exposure to ionising radiation.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of officials of his Department and their sections who have attended meetings at official level under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. John Patten: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council (AIIC) according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the expenditure of the Governments of other member countries of the European Economic Community upon the treatment of those suffering from the effects of drug abuse.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Family Spending Power

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables tabulating net spending power in April 1984 and April 1985 for a family with two children aged 12 and 14 years, paying £28·85 a week mortgage interest, £7·50 a week rates and £1·50 in water rates, in each of the following circumstances (a) husband earns £120 and mother earns £78, (b) husband unemployed, mother earns £78, (c) husband earns £120, wife unemployed and (d) both unemployed.

Mr. Whitney: The net weekly spending power for a family with two children in April 1984 and April 1985 would be as set out in the table. For April 1985 fares to work of £5·65 a week and free school meals value of £2·60 per child have been included. Other assumptions for April 1984 are as in the April 1984 DHSS tax-benefit model tables.

	April 1984 £	April 1985 £
(a) Husband earns £120 wife earns £78	114·50	117·98
(b) Husband unemployed wife earns £78	*81·80	*85·25
(c) Husband earns £120 wife unemployed—in receipt of unemployment benefit	88·30	91·78 wife unemployed—in receipt of supplementary benefit	81·80	85·25

	April 1984 £	April 1985 £
wife unemployed—not in receipt of either unemployment benefit or supplementary benefit	68·11	70·83
(d) both unemployed	77·80	81·25

* If wife is in receipt of married persons's tax allowance.

Unemployment Review Officers

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 18 March, Official Report, column 382, how many of the 850 posts allocated for unemployment review work are actually filled.

Mr. Whitney: All the posts are filled apart from temporary gaps caused by local staffing difficulties.

Voluntary Bodies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of schedule V payments from his Department to voluntary bodies in each of the past five years.

Mr. Whitney: The tables detail payments made to voluntary bodies under schedule V to the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976 (as amended) in each of the past five years.

Resettlement Schemes

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what total level of resources he will be providing to finance resettlement schemes in the voluntary sector following the closure of his Department's re-establishment centres.

Mr. Whitney: The re-establishment centres administered by this Department cost an estimated £2·0 million to run in 1983-84 and following the closure of the centres this sum will be provided to fund alternative resettlement arrangements. As most re-establishment centres and resettlement units share common sites and services the total running costs of re-establishment centres will not be saved immediately upon their closure.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report or place in the Library the interim reports he has received from regional health authorities in response to his circular HC(84)14 of June 1984 about the prevalance of drug abuse.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish the replies of district health authorities to his circular of June 1984 asking about drug abuse and their plans to counter it.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1985, c. 329]: All 14 regional health authorities and the two relevant special health authorities have now sent in reports. These interim reports are working documents.

I shall make a summary of the responses we have received and plans for service development available to the House in due course.

Committee on Gynaecological Cytology

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social services if he will (a) list the members of the Committee on Gynaecological Cytology since 1 January 1981, (b) give the dates when it has met since 1 January 1981 and (c) place in the Library any minutes of its meetings, official recommendations or other communications with Ministers or officials of his Department since 1 January 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 771]: The information is as follows:

(a) The membership of the Committee on Gynaecological Cytology since 1 January 1981 has included:

Mr. R. W. Burslem
Dr. D. M. D. Evans
Dr. E. Blanche Butler
Mr. J. A. Jordan
Dr. A. S. Woodcock
Mrs. W. J. A. Francis
Dr. G. J. Draper
Professor E. G. Knox
Professor Alwyn Smith
Dr. W. G. A. Riddle
Dr. Elizabeth A. Hudson
Dr. K. J. Randall
Mr. K. R. Peel
Dr. Jocelyn Chamberlain
Dr. J. N. Todd
Professor B. M. Hibbard
Dr. K. McPherson
Professor J. M. Elwood

(b) The committee has met on the following occasions since 1 January 1981:

1 April 1981
23 September 1981
18 March 1982
10 December 1982
10 October 1983
3 April 1984

(c) Copies of the committee's report on the age and frequency of screening (September 1981) and of the current guidance to health authorities, health circulars (81)14 and (84)17, have been placed in the Library of the House. We do not usually publish guidance to Ministers from committees of this kind and minutes of their meetings. We will continue to make available any reports we receive from the committee, as these are the most useful documents for the public.

Personal Social Services

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the latest available data on personal social services gross current expenditure, including joint finance, in similar form to that provided in 1984 to the Social Services Committee and published on page 14 of HC 395; and if he will publish a similar table showing (a) net current expenditure in constant prices, (b) gross unit costs, (c) net unit costs and (d) activity levels.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1985, c. 164]: The information requested on personal social services expenditure, unit costs and activity levels is given in the tables. In line with the Department's submission to the Social Services Committee in 1984, the expenditure and unit cost figures are expressed in in-put volume terms (that is after allowing for personal social services pay and price movements). Additionally, tables on personal social services net and gross current expenditure are also given in economic cost terms to provide a more complete picture of expenditure trends.

The figures are derived using the Department's programme budget methodology as described in last year's submission to the Social Services Committee and published in its fourth report (HC 395). These estimates of expenditure are valid for monitoring broad trends but not for making close comparisons between programmes.

It should also be noted that the expenditure and activity data are derived from separate returns, the activity figures are mostly based on a count at 31 March and may not always reflect the average position over the year: this is thought to be particularly relevant to data on residential care (especially those for mentally handicapped children) which are currently the subject of a Departmental review.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to tighten the scheduling of benzodiazepines; and if he will make a statement on their scheduling under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1985, c. 259]: Benzodiazepines are not at present controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act. However, last year 33 benzodiazepines were scheduled under the United Nations Convention on Psychotropic Substances 1971, which the Government intend to ratify.

Detailed consultations are taking place with trade and professional organisations on the changes that will be necessary to our domestic legislation before we can ratify, including the degree of control to be imposed on the benzodiazepines. We are also consulting the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to lay before the House later this year a draft order to bring these drugs within the scope of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

WALES

Homes Insulation

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales by how much he has reduced the homes insulation programme for 1985-86; how many homes he estimates will be affected; what percentage reduction his decision represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 24 January, at column 485, to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam).

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in (a) the Alyn and Deeside constituency, (b) the travel-to-work area of Shotton, Flint and Rhyl and (c) Wales have been out of work for one, two three and four years and more, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The age and duration analysis of unemployment has not yet moved to collection on the ward basis which underlies the new travel-to-work areas. The information requested is not therefore available for the Alyn and Deeside constituency or for the Shotton, Flint and Rhyl travel-to-work area.

Figures for Wales are as follows:

Length of time unemployed	Wales
One year and over but less than two	30,721
Two years and over but less than three	16,969
Three years and over but less than four	11,269
Four years and over	15,840

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many women have died from cervical cancer in Wales in each of the last five years; and how this compares to the United Kingdom average.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of women who have died from cervical cancer (ICD 180) in Wales in each of the last five years for which figures are available is as follows:

	Numbers
1980	125
1981	133
1982	118
1983	136

Allowing for differences in age distribution, the incidence of death from cervical cancer has been on average 11 per cent. higher in Wales than in the United Kingdom as a whole over this period.

EMPLOYMENT

Young Persons (Knowsley)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of young people in Knowsley, North who are employed.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information comes from the 1981 census of population, which showed that 41·5 per cent. of young persons aged 16 to 19 years (inclusive) living in Knowsley, North were in employment.

Inverclyde

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many offences under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act in Inverclyde were identified in the latest available year; and how many were prosecuted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1984 Her Majesty's factory inspectors laid four informations in Inverclyde under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and its associated legislation. These resulted in three convictions.

Marine Trades Industry

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give figures for the total numbers of people employed in the marine trades industry providing or manufacturing goods or services for the private yachtsman.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department's employment estimates are analysed according to the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification, which does not separately distinguish activities associated with providing manufactured goods and services to private yachtsmen.

Political Levy

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the agreement reached with the trade unions with regard to advising members of their right to opt out of the political levy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In fulfilling the 1983 general election commitment, my right hon. Friend discussed with the TUC the steps which trade unions themselves could take to ensure that individual members are freely and effectively able to decide for themselves whether or not to pay the political levy. As an outcome of those discussions the TUC agreed a detailed "Statement of Guidance" dealing with union members' rights in relation to political funds and asked unions to review their existing procedures to ensure that this guidance was acted upon. The TUC also provided all unions with a model information sheet which the statement recommends each union member should receive. At that time it was made clear to the TUC, and to the House, that the Government's decision not to proceed in the 1984 Trade Union Bill with changes to the contracting out system would rest on the firm expectation that the TUC action would in practice be effective. If it was not, the Government reserved their right to legislate.

Trade unions are already under a clear statutory obligation on the occasion of any ballot in which their members give approval for the expenditure of money on party political matters under the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1913 to notify union members of their right to contract out of the political levy and inform them that a standard exemption notice may be obtained from the union or the Certification Officer. This obligation applies to the ballots to review the continued operation of political funds which are to be held between now and 31 March 1986. We shall continue to look to the trade unions concerned to ensure that their statutory as well as their voluntary commitments are properly fulfilled.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the study commissioned by his Department on the unfair dismissal provisions, and the employment consequences of any changes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Publication of the findings of the research undertaken by the University of Manchester institute of science and technology into the operation of recent individual employment legislation is planned for later this year. It will be published in the Department of Employment research paper series and a copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications there were to industrial tribunals for unfair dismissal due to trade union membership or trade union activities for the years 1982, 1983 and 1984; how many cases were actually heard in each year; and in how many of such cases the claimant was successful.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The best information available for the years 1982 and 1983 is as follows. Figures for 1984 are not yet available.

Number of applications	820	357
Number of applications withdrawn/settlement agreed	694	225
Applications heard by industrial tribunals	126	132
Number of successful applicants	21	21

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications there were to industrial tribunals for unfair dismissal due to non-membership of a trade union for the years 1982, 1983 and 1984; how many cases were actually heard in each year; and in how many of such cases the claimant was successful.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The best information available for the years 1982 and 1983 is as follows. Figures for 1984 are not yet available.

	1982	1983
Number of applications	6	15
Number of applications withdrawn/settlement agreed	4	8
Applications heard by industrial tribunals	2	7
Number of successful applications	0	3

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications to the industrial tribunals for unfair dismissal had between one and two years' continuous service in 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Total figures are not available. On the basis of a sample analysis of complaints of unfair dismissal for the calendar years 1982 and 1983, it is estimated that the following number of complaints were from applicants who had between one and two years' continuous service:

Year	Number of complaints
1983	5,840

These figures should be treated with caution because of the margin of error inherent in any sample. Figures are not yet available for 1984.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many departmental committees of inquiry he and his predecessors have commissioned since 1955; what were the subjects the committees investigated and the dates they were established; who chaired them; and on which dates they reported.

Mr. Brittan: The information requested is set out in the table and relates to committees which have been established and have reported since 1955. It does not include either departmental working parties chaired by permanent officials or inquiries undertaken by one individual.

Probation Centres

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions premises for probation centres have been acquired without prior consultation with the local authority or local community.

Mr. Mellor: Consultation with the local authority or local community is a matter for area probation committees when acquiring premises. Information about this is not collected centrally.

Long-term Prison System

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now make a statement on progress in implementing the proposals contained in the report of the Central Review Committee on the long-term prison system.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 15 March, at column 303.

BBC (Licence Revenue)

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of licence revenue the British Broadcasting Corporation would lose if retirement pensioners were exempt from paying.

Mr. Giles Shaw: About 35 per cent.

Leicestershire County Council

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been given to Leicestershire county council in each of the past five years under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to help Commonwealth immigrants and their families; if his Department monitors how the money has been spent; how often the eligibility of projects on which such moneys are spent is reviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Grant under section 11 is paid to local authorities only in respect of staff employed to meet the special needs of Commonwealth immigrants. The sums paid to Leicestershire county council in the latest five year period for which information is available are as follows:

1979-80	1,314,760
1980-81	1,539,790
1981-82	1,684,994
1982-83	1,901,199
1983-84	2,189,995

During this period grant was paid both in respect of identified posts and on the basis of the formula referred to in paragraph 21 of the Home Office evidence to the Home Affairs Committee (published as HC414-II, 20 July 1981). The formula arrangement came to an end on 31 March 1984. The eligibility for further grant of posts approved under the current administrative criteria (contained in Home Office circular No. 97/1982, a copy of which is in the Library) will be reviewed after three years. A review of posts approved under the frevious arrangements, to ensure that these posts meet the current criteria, is nearing completion.

Prisons (Education Facilities)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates of Her Majesty's prisons in England undertook Open University study during 1984; and how many of those inmates were moved during their course of study to a prison or unit where Open University study facilities were not available.

Mr. Mellor: One hundred and sixty-one inmates in prison department establishments in England and Wales undertook Open University study in 1984. The number who were moved to another establishment or unit during their course of study is not recorded centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the prisons in England which (a) can provide facilities for inmates to undertake Open University courses and (b) cannot provide such facilities: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information in respect of adult prisons in England and Wales is as follows:

(a) Establishments currently designated for Open University study:

Acklington
Albany
Ashwell
Askham Grange
Blundeston
Bristol
Cookham Wood
Dartmoor
Durham
Featherstone
Ford
Frankland
Gartree
Gredon/Springhill
Holloway
Hull
Kingston/Portsmouth
Kirkham
Lewes
Layhill
Liverpool
Long Lartin
Maidstone
Nottingham
Parkhurst
Styal
Sudbury
Swansea
The Verne
Wakefield
Wormwood Scrubs

(b) Establishments not currently designated for Open University study:

Bedford
Birmingham
Brixton
Camp Hill
Canterbury
Cardiff
Channings Wood
Coldingley
Dorchester
Drake Hall
East Sutton Park
Exeter
Gloucester
Haverigg
Highpoint
Lancaster
Leeds
Leicester
Lincoln
Manchester
Northeye
Norwich
Oxford
Pentonville
Preston
Ranby
Reading
Rudgate
Shepton Mallet
Shrewsbury
Stafford
Stanford Hill
Wandsworth
Wayland
Winchester
Wymott

The list of establishments designated for Open University study is agreed with the university authorities and is kept under review. At the beginning of this calendar year six establishments — Acklington, Ashwell, Blundeston, Frankland, Grendon/Spring Hill and Kirkham —were included in the list for the first time. In addition to the adult establishments listed above, Open University study is available at Aylesbury youth custody centre.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list for each prison in England (a) the average potential number of attendances in the education unit and (b) the average actual number of attendances in the education unit for (i) 1984 and (ii) the first quarter of 1985.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not recorded in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total number of student hours in respect of day and evening classes in all prison department establishments in England and Wales for the academic year 1983-84 was 4,886,948.

Badger Baiting

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been (a) prosecuted and (b) convicted of badger baiting in (i) Wales and (ii) England in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Information collected centrally does not distinguish offences of badger baiting from other offences against the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Stop and Search Powers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Association of Chief Police Officers regarding the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 on the power of police officers to conduct blanket searches at or in the immediate vicinity of sports stadiums; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 727]: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering representations from the Association of Chief Police Officers about whether the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 might have any adverse effect on the ability of the police to conduct blanket searches at sports grounds. He intends to refer the association to the answer I gave to a question from my hon. Friend on 2 April, at columns 570-71, since he believes that this answer, particularly its last paragraph, should reassure those who believe that the conduct of the police will be inhibited in this respect by the provisions of the 1984 Act.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Halvergate Levels (Drainage Payments)

10. Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been paid to the three farmers who have received grants for field drainage in the Halvergate levels area.

Mrs. Fenner: As I told the hon. Member on 17 January in answer to his earlier question, we have paid grant totalling £21,500 for field drainage in the Halvergate levels.

Wheat (Intervention Stocks)

12. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of intervention stocks of wheat held in British stores.

Mr. MacGregor: At 31 March there were 3 million tonnes of wheat in United Kingdom intervention stores.

Nutritional Food Labelling

13. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist the public to understand nutritional food labelling.

Mrs. Fenner: Draft guidelines on nutrition labelling have been circulated widely for public comment by 1 June. The result of a consumer survey of understanding of nutrition labelling of food should also be available to me by that date. I shall consider what may be necessary to assist the public in the light of this information.

32. Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects consultations to be completed on the Government's proposals to implement recommendations of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Nutritional and Food report.

Mrs. Fenner: We have asked for comments from interested parties on the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend on 12 March to be received by 1 June. In the meantime officials will be holding further discussions with representatives of those sectors where particular problems have been identified. We shall prepare proposals for regulations in the light of all the comments made and circulate them later this year for the statutory consultation.

Dairy Farmers

14. Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of dairy farmers in England; and what was the number five years ago.

Mr. MacGregor: On 31 December 1984 there were 33,009 milk producers in England, compared with 37,654 on 31 December 1979.

Less Favoured Areas

16. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will conduct an investigation into expanding the less favoured areas of the farming industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jopling: The less favoured areas were extended last year following a survey of marginal land in the United Kingdom. I have invited representations from individual farmers who are unhappy about the exclusion of their land from the areas.

Beef Premium Scheme

18. Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate by how many pence per pound the beef premium scheme is presently reducing prices in the shops.

Mr. MacGregor: The current maximum rate of beef variable premium is worth about 7.4 p/lb on a certified carcase. Many factors influence butchers' pricing policy, but we estimate that if retail prices of beef were to change to compensate for loss of the premium an average increase of 4 to 5 per cent. in retail beef prices would be required.

Agricultural Policy

21. Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department proposes to publish an update of the Government's overall agricultural policy.

Mr. Jopling: I am still considering whether it would be appropriate to make a formal Government statement.

Thames Barrier

22. Mr. Jessel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the use of the Thames barrier when flood conditions arise on different parts of the tidal Thames.

Mrs. Fenner: The operational procedures of the Thames barrier are designed to avoid danger from tidal surge to life and property in areas adjoining the tidal reaches of the Thames and, at the same time, create the minimum interference to navigation.

Cereals and Beef (Intervention Stores)

23. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total tonnage of cereals and beef in intervention stores at the most recent date for which figures are available; and what was the comparable total five years ago.

Mr. MacGregor: At 31 March there were 4 million tonnes of cereals and 51,000 tonnes of beef in United Kingdom intervention stores. The corresponding quantities for 31 March 1980 were 400 tonnes of cereals and 15,000 tonnes of beef.

Cereals

24. Mr. Marlow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate as to the likely upper and lower limits for the cost of disposal of cereal surpluses in the European Economic Community for the 1984-85 crop year.

Mr. MacGregor: Estimates of Community expenditure are made on a calendar year basis by the Commission. In 1984 actual expenditure on export refunds totalled 918 mecu. For 1985 the Commission is currently estimating export refund expenditure at 1,034 mecu.

29. Mr. Spence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of United Kingdom cereal exports for each of the past two years.

Mr. MacGregor: Exports of wheat and barley from the United Kingdom totalled 3·9 million tonnes in 1983 and 6·1 million tonnes in 1984.

Land Drainage, Flood Prevention and Coast Protection

25. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has yet received any responses to his Green Paper, "Financing and Administration of Land Drainage, Flood Prevention and Coast Protection in England and Wales"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: We have had no responses to date. The paper was published on 11 March, and in view of the complexity of many of the issues raised in the Paper we anticipate that it will be some time before we receive substantive comments. The six-month period allowed for consultations reflects this. In these circumstances, a statement would be premature.

35. Sir Michael Shaw asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans Her Majesty's Government have to improve the funding and administration of land drainage, flood protection and coastal protection.

Mrs. Fenner: A Green Paper entitled "Financing and Administration of Land Drainage, Flood Prevention and Coast Protection in England and Wales" was published on 11 March 1985. We shall consider what changes should be made to the administration and financing of these activities in the light of public response to the Green Paper.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

26. Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the performance of the Sea Fish Industry Authority in the promotion and marketing of fish in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The multi-million pound campaign now being carried out by the Sea Fish Industry Authority should produce significant improvements in the marketing and consumption of fish. I was glad that we were able to obtain the approval of the European Commission to over three quarters of the programme and hope soon to clear the remaining elements.

Grain Production

27. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of grain produced in the European Economic Community in 1984.

Mr. MacGregor: The Community cereals harvest in 1984 is estimated to be 151 million tonnes.

Milk Quota Levy

28. Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contingency plans he has made to provide for the collection of milk quota levy.

Mr. MacGregor: All of the arrangements necessary for the collection of any supplementary levy that may become due are in place. Since, however, production within the United Kingdom was well within quota I do not expect that there will be any liability for levy in respect of 1984-85.

Wool Marketing Board

30. Mr. Freeman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied with the operation of the Wool Marketing Board.

Mr. Jopling: As I made clear recently after a visit to the board, I am most impressed by the board's marketing achievements. It is clear that the board has made a major effort in recent years to upgrade the quality of home-produced wool, and the demand for it, and has been very successful in these objectives.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

31. Mr. Soames asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the future basis of hill livestock compensatory allowances in the light of the recent agreement on a new European Community farm structures package.

Mr. Jopling: Hill livestock compensatory allowances remain an optional measure under the new structures regulation agreed by the Council of Ministers. Current rates and conditions will be reviewed in the autumn in the usual way.

Dutch Horticulture Industry

33. Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current position on moves by the European Commission to stop the Dutch subsidy on gas prices for its horticulture industry.

Mrs. Fenner: The European Commission has informed the Dutch Government that the preferential gas price to Dutch horticulturists is an incompatible state aid and must be removed. The Dutch Government are contesting this decision and have asked the European Court to consider the matter.

Animal Welfare

34. Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to implement new proposals from the Farm Animal Welfare Council to tighten up existing codes.

Mrs. Fenner: The Farm Animal Welfare Council is consulting interests about possible recommendations for new regulations based on the welfare codes. The council has not, however, submitted recommedations to Ministers. When it does, the Government will of course consider them carefully and consult interests. Any new regulations then proposed would be laid before Parliament for debate.

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will, as a matter of urgency, introduce new measures to safeguard the transportation of live animals when they are exported.

Mrs. Fenner: There is no need for such measures. There is already extensive legislation to protect the welfare of animals for export, which implements requirements laid down in Community directives.

Mr. Greenway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the transport of horses and ponies to and from markets.

Mrs. Fenner: The welfare of horses and ponies in transit is protected by existing legislation, which is enforced by local authorities.

Food From Britain

36. Mr. Walden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the likely level and source of future funding on Food From Britain.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government are providing about £14 million towards expenditure on food marketing by Food From Britain over the five years 1983-84 to 1987-88. We have made it clear that the future of Food From Britain will depend on the level of financial support it receives from the industry. It is important that industry's commitment to that support should be made soon so that FFB can plan ahead with confidence.

Almonds and Hazelnuts

37. Mr. Shersby asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the accession of Spain and Portugal into the European Economic Community will affect the supply of almonds and hazelnuts to United Kingdom food manufacturers.

Mrs. Fenner: United Kingdom food manufacturers will benefit from the reduction in tariffs on almonds and hazelnuts imported from Spain and Portugal. This will be progressively implemented during the transitional period following accession.

Pâté de Foie Gras

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries are suppliers of pâté de foie gras to the United Kingdom; and how much was imported in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor: Imports of pâté de foie gras are not separately distinguished in the customs tariff.

In 1983 the United Kingdom imported 66 tonnes of prepared or preserved goose and duck liver products, of which 57 tonnes were supplied by France and nine tonnes by Belgium/Luxembourg.

Fishing Boats

Mr. Viggers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give his best estimate of the number of fishing boats (a) 12 m and below in length and (b) above 12 m in length.

Mr. MacGregor: The precise information requested is not readily available, but the number of United Kingdom fishing boats above and below 12·2 m (40 ft) at the beginning of 1984 were:

	Number
Below 12·2 m	4,765
12·2 m and above	2,205

North Sea (White Fish Stocks)

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has considered the evidence obtained by the fishing vessel mv Aquila regarding the effect of the increased pout by-catch on white fish stocks in the North sea.

Mr. MacGregor: I am considering carefully the information provided by the Scottish Fishermen's Federation concerning the catches taken during the experimental voyage of the Aquila together with the information obtained from monitoring the commercial fishery for Norway pout. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office and I propose to meet the industry shortly to discuss these findings.

Surplus Food Stocks

Mr. Canavan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current volume and value of surplus food stocks (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the European Economic Community as a result of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: On 31 March intervention stocks of beef, breadwheat, butter and skimmed milk powder in the United Kingdom were 305,446 tonnes, valued at some £443 million using the buying-in prices valid on that date. The volume of Community stocks of these products and sugar at the latest available dates was 8,516,000 tonnes, but these are valued only once a year, on 30 November.

Lincoln Flood Alleviation Scheme

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received his inspector's report on the public inquiry into the Lincoln flood alleviation scheme; and whether he will now agree to grant-aid the flood relief scheme as proposed by the Anglian water authority.

Mr. Jopling: I have now received my inspector's report following the public inquiry into the proposed flood alleviation scheme for Lincoln. On the basis of the report, a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House,

I have decided to approve the scheme put forward by the Anglian water authority for grant-aid under the Land Drainage Act 1976 and to confirm the compulsory purchase order sought by the authority.

This scheme, which will cost over £9 million, will provide a substantially higher level of protection against flooding in the city of Lincoln. The provision of controlled wash lands upstream, rather than increasing the carrying capacity of the channels through the city itself, represents a more cost-effective solution which also avoids works which would be environmentally damaging.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Relief

Mr. Maples asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the expected cost in terms of revenue forgone in the 1984-85 tax year from (a) mortgage interest relief and *(b)*relief on employees and self-employed pension contributions arising from relief allowed at higher rates of tax.

Mr. Moore: The direct revenue cost of income tax relief at rates in excess of the basic rate in 1984-85 is estimated to be about £200 million for mortgage interest relief and about £200 million for relief on employees' and self employed pension contributions. The direct revenue costs of these reliefs taken in combination are estimated at about £425 million.

Value Added Tax (Keith Report)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the proposals of the Keith report for changes in the value added tax collection arrangements.

Mr. Hayhoe: A total of 139 since the publication of the consultative document "The Collection of Value Added Tax" in November 1984.

PAYE (Inquiry Offices)

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate how many pay-as-you-earn inquiry offices are maintained (a) within the Greater London council area and (b) in Cornwall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: There are 35 specially designated pay-as-you-earn inquiry offices in the Greater London council area and none in Cornwall. In addition, inquiry points exist at all other tax district offices of which there are 130 in London and five in Cornwall.

The specially designated inquiry offices were set up to provide a continuing service to the public following the transfer of the files of most London pay-as-you-earn taxpayers to the provinces. In most parts of the country, including Cornwall, the majority of employers and their employees continue to be dealt with by the local tax district, so that there is not the same need for official PAYE inquiry offices.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide that in future an appropriate symbol shall be attached in the Supply Estimates to Vote C1 in Class V, 10, and to Vote B4 in Class VIII, 4, to indicate specifically that any unexpended balances of grants in aid made to the national heritage memorial fund will not be liable to surrender to the Consolidated Fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: Regrettably the appropriate symbol was omitted in error from the Supply Estimates.

The accounts of expenditure from grants in aid to the national heritage memorial fund are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General. Any sums in the fund which are not immediately required for any purpose may be invested by the trustees in accordance with section 6 of the National Heritage Act 1980 and are not liable, therefore, for surrender to the Consolidated Fund.

Trustee Savings Banks

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his responsibilities and those of Her Majesty's Government in relation to the trustee savings banks.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1981, which consolidated earlier legislation, the Treasury, the National Debt Commissioners and the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies have wide powers over trustee savings banks. The Treasury's powers extend in particular to the determination of the assets in which trustee savings banks may invest, to the approval of the appointment of the chief officer of the Trustee Savings Banks Central Board, and to a number of matters in relation to the fund for the banks for savings. The relationship between the Government and the trustee savings banks is described in the White Paper entitled "Trustee Savings Banks" (Cmnd. 9415) published in December 1984.

Income Tax

Mr. Greenway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the rate of change in yield from income tax of a 1p change in the standard rate of income tax in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: About £1,150 million in a full year, at 1985-86 levels of income.

Occupational Pension Trusts

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the yield of tax that would be obtained if the funds held by occupational trusts as reserves and not allocated as the entitlement of individual beneficiaries were taxed at the same rate as the income drawn by companies from assets in the ownership of the company;

(2) what is his estimate of the total value of the funds invested in the occupational pension trusts approved for tax purposes for beneficiaries in private sector employment; and what is the proportion which can be identified as having been allocated to particular beneficiaries.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 18 March 1985, c. 396]: I regret the delay in replying. Total net assets of superannuation funds established by private sector employers were about £62·5 billion at the end of 1983. As stated in my written reply of 19 March 1985 at column

463, this excludes assets of long-term insurance funds relating to occupational pensions. The amounts allocated to particular beneficiaries are not known. In referring to sums not so allocated, my hon. Friend may have in mind any funds temporarily held in a pension fund over and above the sum currently estimated to be needed, on an actuarial valuation, to honour the scheme's obligations to its members. I regret that there is not sufficient information to enable such funds to be identified or to make an estimate of the likely yield from taxing them.

Company Taxation

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of tax payable by companies in respect of income derived from assets in the ownership of the company; and what is the rate of tax payable when such assets are transferred to the pension fund of the company.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1985, c. 392]: I regret the delay in replying. The rate of tax payable by companies in respect of income derived from assets in the ownership of the company depends on the tax status of the company concerned. A company may make contributions to its pension fund but cannot directly transfer assets. If the contributions are used to purchase assets from the company then the latter may face a capital gains tax liability in respect of the sale of the assets. Investment income and capital gains of pension funds are exempt from tax.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

"Better Schools"

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be able to update the information in "Better Schools" on class size, contact ratios and the distribution of class sizes to provide data for 1985.

Mr. Dunn: In the autumn of 1985.

Steiner Schools

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it is his intention to exercise his powers under section 19*(c)* of the Education Act 1981 to make special provision for recognition of (a) teachers and (b) teacher training within Steiner schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1985, c. 493]: My right hon. Friend has been considering the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers, contained in its report on teacher training and special educational needs, which included recommendations about Steiner-trained teachers and Steiner schools. While he recognises the excellent work done by many Steiner schools in teaching and caring for those with special educational needs, and would not wish to undervalue it in any way, he has decided that Steiner training should not be admissible for qualified teacher status, and that Steiner schools should not be exempt from the general conditions (including those regarding an adequate number of qualified teachers) governing the approval of independent schools which take local education authority placements of children with statements of special educational needs. Qualified teacher status entitles the holder to teach in any school within the maintained system; it is the view of my right hon. Friend that the training received by teachers under the Steiner system (including that of the Camphill schools) is not such as to prepare them for teaching in maintained schools, and he is not prepared to grant a limited form of qualified teacher status which applies only to Steiner schools.

My right hon. Friend acknowledges the valuable contribution which the Steiner schools have made and continue to make to the care of severely handicapped pupils, many of whom have gross learning and emotional difficulties; he hopes that these schools will flourish and that local education authorities will continue to use them when appropriate. I can assure the right hon. Member that local education authorities will still be able to place pupils with statements of special educational needs at these schools if they wish, subject to my right hon. Friend's consent, and that he will be ready to give that consent in all cases where the placements are suitable.

SCOTLAND

Regions (Social and Economic Review)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, since his letter of 30 October 1984 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill, what further consideration his Department has given to the conclusion in the report on the social and economic situation in the regions of the European Community (second periodic review), ranking Strathclyde and Dumfries and Galloway as ninth in the Commission's group one priority.

Mr. Allan Stewart: As was explained in the correspondence referred to, the second periodic report is an analysis of regional problems in the Community and does not itself form a basis for re-assessment of the Community's current priorities. The needs of Strathclyde region will continue to be given the fullest consideration in relation to Community assistance.

Adult Education

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to introduce an initiative similar to REPLAN operating in England and Wales and Northern Ireland to provide educational opportunities for adults for Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are no plans to introduce a similar initiative in Scotland because alternative means of securing the development of educational provision for unemployed adults are available through the education authorities, the Scottish Community Education Council and a range of voluntary organisations grant-aided by the Scottish Education Department.

Cormorants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those locations for which licences to kill cormorants were issued in 1984 and 1985, respectively; and if he will indicate the number of birds killed at each location.

Mr. John MacKay: The locations for which licences were issued to kill cormorants for the prevention of serious damage to fisheries in 1984 and 1985 to date are as follows:

Loch or River System	Number of licences		Numbers Killed
	1984	1985	1984	1985
Loch Maree	1	Nil	5	Nil
Loch Leven	1	Nil	107	Nil
Lochailort	1	2	1	Nil

Wild Birds (Licences)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the guidelines used by his staff in considering applications for the issue of licences under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. John MacKay: In considering applications for licences issued for the prevention of serious damage to fisheries in river systems account is taken not only of the advice received from the Nature Conservancy Council but also the information given by applicants as regards the kind and extent of damage occurring or thought likely to occur, the history of licences issued in previous years and whether there are reasonable and practical alternatives to the issue of a licence.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the general advice given by the Nature Conservancy Council that his Department abides by when considering applications for licences under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. John MacKay: The advice received from the council relates normally to individual species of birds and animals, and is generally to the effect that shooting should be limited to the minimum level necessary to achieve the purposes for which the various licences under section 16 of the Act may be granted.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which sites were visited before licences were issued to kill cormorants in 1983, 1984 and so far in the current year, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: No sites were visited. As I indicated in my reply of 4 April at column 735 it is felt impracticable to visit stretches of river systems for which the local fishery interests have applied for licences.

Oyster Industry

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the condition of the oyster industry in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. Friend is pleased with the expansion of the developing oyster industry in Scotland where a number of growers have achieved production on a commercial scale.

Job Creation (Greenock)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of funding is devoted by the Manpower Services Commission to the Greenock travel-to-work area.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Youth Training

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people leaving the youth training programme in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth proceeded to full-time employment..

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret the information is not available in the form requested. However, the most recent results of the Manpower Services Commission's regular monthly survey of a 15 per cent. sample of young people who leave the youth training scheme in Great Britain show that over 60 per cent. went into full-time employment and around two thirds went into work or other full-time education or training.

Forth and Tay Bridges (Tolls)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy towards the abolition of tolls on the Forth and Tay bridges.

Mr. Ancram: The Government have no plans to abolish tolls on the Forth and Tay bridges. These crossings were provided on the understanding that the capital debt would be serviced and ultimately repaid and the maintenance costs met by users through tolls, rather than by the generality of tax and ratepayers. This has been the policy of successive Governments and we see no reason for departing from it.

Edinburgh

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make it his policy to use all measures available to Her Majesty's Government to maintain Edinburgh as a distinct and viable financial centre with a full range of specialised banking activities.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend fully recognises the importance of Edinburgh as a financial centre. He considers that the Government's economic policies provide the climate in which Scottish financial institutions will continue to thrive.

Benefits

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons received unemployment benefit in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth in each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information on unemployed claimants by parliamentary constituency only became available in June 1983. The annual average of unemployed claimants in 1984 in the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency was 4,397. Information on unemployed persons in the jobcentre areas which approximate to the constituency is available from 1979 onwards in the House of Commons Library.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name, by county, those deciduous woodlands which have been (a) clearfelled and replanted with conifers and (b) clearfelled for agriculture under the terms of a Forestry Commission licence since January 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans the Foresty Commission has for aerial spraying of pesticides as part of forestry operations in the current year;

(2) whether the Forestry Commission or any other statutory authority undertakes any monitoring of, or grant approval for, the aerial spraying of pesticides on forest land in the private sector.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether landholders adjacent to those areas of forest owned by the Forestry Commission which are subject to aerial pesticide spraying have the opportunity to view or receive a copy of the map which results from the print-out of the track flown by the spraying contractor.

Mr. John MacKay: Neighbouring landowners are notified in advance of spraying. Subsequent track point-outs may be inspected by them on request.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons within the Grampian health board area are on waiting lists for treatment for hip conditions in National Health Service hospitals; and what is the average period such persons are required to wait before the treatment is performed.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1985, c. 80]: Four hundred and thirty eight persons within the Grampian health board area are currently on waiting lists for hip replacements. At 31 December 1982 the latest date for which information is available, the mean waiting time for this treatment was 145 days.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons are on hospital waiting lists in Scotland in respect of treatment for hip conditions; and what is the average period of time such persons are required to wait before treatment is given.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1985, c. 80]: The most recent complete statistics on waiting lists for hip treatments and the mean waiting time relate to 31 December 1982. They are:

Total hip replacement waiting list	1,652 cases
Mean waiting time	221 days

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in the Banff and Buchan constituency have been on waiting lists for treatment for eye defects for less than three months.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1985, c. 80]: Thirty one people in the Banff and Buchan district have been on the ophthalmology waiting list for less than three months.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in the Banff and Buchan constituency are on waiting lists for treatment for hip conditions in National Health Service hospitals in Aberdeen; and what is the average period of time such persons have to wait before treatment is performed.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1985, c. 79]: One hundred and fifty seven persons in the Banff and Buchan district are currently on waiting lists for hip replacements; approximately one third will be treated in Aberdeen. The mean waiting time for patients from Banff and Buchan treated in Aberdeen in 1984 was 322 days.

Art Galleries (Maintenance Costs)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the respective costs of maintenance of the buildings occupied by the National Gallery of Scotland, the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art, the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and the Royal Scottish Academy.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 2 April 1985, c. 545]: Expenditure on stone work, roof repairs, internal repairs, paint work and keeping the buildings secure from the elements for 1983-84 (the most recent year for which figures are available) is as follows. Running expenditure (heating, lighting, cleaning, etc.) is not included:

National Gallery of Scotland	133,300
Gallery of Modern Art*	5,200
Scottish National Portrait Gallery†	87,300
Royal Scottish Academy	62,100

* This figure is for maintenance of Inverleith House, the home of the Gallery of Modern Art till August 1984.

† This building houses the Portrait Gallery and the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland.

DEFENCE

RAF Trainer Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the last bids were received from Shorts Bros. and British Aerospace, respectively, for the Royal Air Force replacement aircraft.

Mr. Butler: The last bids for the Royal Air Force replacement trainer were received from Shorts on 14 March 1985 and from British Aerospace on 19 March 1985.

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence if a report will be made to the two companies concerned about the process of bidding for the Royal Air Force replacement training aircraft according to the original understanding with them.

Mr. Butler: The Ministry is prepared to provide a debriefing, on request, to any of the tenderers for the replacement basic trainer for the Royal Air Force. I myself have had a meeting with the chairman and managing director of British Aerospace.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary Service

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he envisages the ships of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Service continuing to be registered as British merchant ships.

Mr. Stanley: Over a considerable period, the evolving pattern of the Royal Navy's operations and commitments has increasingly tended to distinguish RFA vessels from commercial shipping. It would seem right to reflect this in the status of RFA ships. My Department has therefore issued a consultative document today, proposing that RFA vessels should cease to be registered as British merchant ships for the purpose of the Merchant Shipping Acts, but instead should operate as Government-owned vessels on non-commercial service. This proposed change in the status of the ships would not involve any change in the present conditions of service of RFA personnel. The ships would no longer be issued with international safety convention certificates but the Ministry of Defence would accept responsibility for their safety following surveys carried out on its behalf by the Department of Transport and by Lloyds Register of Shipping as at present.

There will now be consultation on the proposal with the trade unions involved and with official bodies in the shipping industry. Copies of the consultative document, entitled "Royal Fleet Auxiliary Service—De-registration of Ships", have been placed in the Library of both Houses.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Warsaw Pact Countries (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Cardinal Glemp and other Polish leaders.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend saw Cardinal Glemp on 13 April, taking further the private talk they had during his recent visit here. They discussed the situation of the Church in Poland. In his talks with the Polish Government my right hon. and learned Friend stressed the importance we attach to arms control and the Geneva negotiations, our concern for human rights and reconciliation in Poland and our wish to improve bilateral relations.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to the Eastern European countries.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 16 April, at column 131-32.

Syrian Nationals

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the Syrian chargé d'affaires has yet provided any satisfactory clarification of the specific points put to him at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 5 February regarding the deportation of four Syrian nationals on 29 January; and by what date such a response was required to be given;

(2) whether the issue of why Mr. Marwan Lostan, described in his passport as an engineer, was also in possession of a Syrian diplomatic passport at the time of his arrest on 20 January, although not accredited to the Syrian embassy in London, was one of the specific points on which he has sought clarification from the Syrian chargé d'affaires; and if he has yet received clarification on these specific points.

Mr. Luce: We received some further clarifications from the Syrian authorities on 5 March.

Arms Control

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress so far in the arms reduction talks currently taking place in Geneva.

Mr. Luce: The first round of United States—Soviet talks in Geneva on nuclear and outer space arms has borne out predictions that these talks would be long and hard. Discussions have so far concentrated on procedural matters, relating to the work of the three negotiating subgroups, and on the presentation of views by each side. Our American allies continue to keep us closely informed of detailed developments which must, of course, remain confidential.

Albania

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to make contact with the new Government of Albania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1980 we formally notified the Albanian Government that we were ready to re-establish diplomatic relations without preconditions. Regrettably, the Albanians have not accepted this offer which, as we have made clear, remains open. There has so far been no indication from the new Albanian leadership of any change in the Albanian position.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is now considering returning to Albania the gold currently held in the United Kingdom which was looted by the Nazis during the second world war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Albanian Government have laid claim to gold which is the responsibility of the Tripartite Commission for the Restitution of Monetary Gold, on which the Governments of the United States and France are equal partners with Her Majesty's Government. There are several claims against Albania or on the gold itself. We cannot therefore act unilaterally in this matter.

Anglo-Irish Encounter Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to what has been the contribution of the Government of the Republic of Ireland towards the Anglo-Irish Encounter Group in the years 1983-84 and 1984-85; and what provision has been made by them for 1985-86.

Mr. Rifkind: It would not be appropriate for us to comment on the disbursement of funds by the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Poisonous Soap

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports he has received from the consumer protection department of Lambeth borough council about the manufacture and distribution of poisonous soap; and whether he intends to take any action under the Consumer Safety Act to prevent the manufacture and distribution of such soaps.

Mr. Fletcher: The trading standard officers of several London boroughs, including Lambeth, have reported instances of soaps containing mercury. Under the Cosmetic Products Regulations 1978 mercury, with minor exceptions, is prohibited as an ingredient in soaps for sale in the United Kingdom. Steps have now been taken by the local authorities concerned to remove the soaps and to prevent further supplies being made.

Marine Coatings and Anti-fouling Paints

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the contribution to the British economy by the manufacturers of marine coatings and anti-fouling paints.

Mr. Trippier: Production of marine paints by companies in the United Kingdom replying to the Government's "Business Monitor" inquiries is as follows.

Value of sales in the year to 30 September 1984

	£ million
Ships bottom compositions	20·6
Other marine paints	16·6

I understand that well over half of this is exported, though detailed figures are not available.

Mr. J. Rickford (Correspondence)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report the letter sent by Mr. J. Rickford of his Department to the United States Securities and Exchange Commission about compensation in the event of nationalisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am placing a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the letter written by Mr. J. Rickford of the Department of Trade and Industry to the United States Securities and Exchange Commission represents the Government's policy in relation to fair compensation for United Kingdom citizens whose assets have been nationalised.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Mr. Rickford's letter is a statement of the legal protection available for purchasers of BT shares. It is not a statement of policy. The Government's policy on compensation to former owners of aircraft and shipbuilding assets nationalised under The Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977 remains as stated by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Industry on 7 August 1980.

Investment

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the periods 1963 to 1970, 1972 to 1978 and 1979 to 1983 the average annual value of inward and outward investment in manufacturing in terms of 1980 values, for the EEC and for the world as a whole.

Mr. Trippier: The information available is only at current prices and is:

Average annual United Kingdom direct investment in manufacturing industries

£ million

	Inward		Outward
	*EC	World	*EC	World
1963-1970	18·1	173·6	37·4	187·7
1972-1978	60·4	555·8	225·6	931·3
1979-1982†	5·0	733·6	192·0	1,655·0

* Includes Denmark, Irish Republic and Greece.
† 1983 information is not available.
Source: Overseas Transactions Inquiry.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the periods 1963 to 1970, 1972 to 1978 and 1979 to 1983 the average of the annual value in terms of 1980 values of inward and outward investment, excluding oil, for the EEC and for the world as a whole.

Mr. Trippier: The information available is only at current prices:

Average annual United Kingdom direct investment (excluding oil)

£ million

	*Inward		Outward
	EC†	World	EC†	World
1963-70	28·6	230·5	65·6	358·6
1972-78	152·0	856·7	395·2	1,691·9
1979-82‡	90·6	1,583·7	306·4	3,503·6

* Insurance is included only from 1969.
† Includes Denmark, Irish Republic and Greece.
‡ 1983 information is not available.
Source: Overseas Transactions Inquiry.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for (a) the world and (b) the EEC the value of inward and outward direct investment, excluding oil, at 1980 prices or values.

Mr. Trippier: Direct investment consists of transactions in financial assets for which no suitable price indices are available. Inward and outward direct investment, excluding oil, at current prices are given in tables 3.1 and 4.1 of "Business Monitor MA4".

Unipart

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he now has to privatise Unipart;

(2) what proportion of the custom of Unipart is with companies other than Austin Rover;

(3) if, in considering whether to privatise Unipart, he has taken account of the in-house parts operations of Austin Rover's main competitors;

(4) what account he has taken, in his consideration of the possibility of privatising Unipart, of the effect of such privatisation on the financial position of Austin Rover.

Mr. Butcher: It is the shared objective of the BL Board and the Government to return the company and its constituent businesses, either together or separately, to the private sector as soon as is practical. Announcements as to how this will be achieved for particular businesses will be made in due course. In considering any proposals relating to the privatisation of Unipart the Government will naturaly take account of the issues identified by my hon. Friend.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he seeks to include China in European Economic Community consideration of a new multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Channon: Yes. China is a signatory of the multi-fibre arrangement. In considering the future of the MFA we shall of course bear in mind the fact that China is a state trading country and is not a member of the GATT.

Television Licences

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the policy of his Department in relation to the issue of licences to persons wishing to establish new master antenna television systems.

Mr. Butcher: We are considering our policy towards the licensing of new master antenna television systems and discussing its implications with those most directly concerned. We will make known our conclusions shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Incomes

Mr. Winnick asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will bring forward proposals to require right hon. and hon. Members to make an annual declaration of their gross annual income and the sources from which it is derived.

Mr. Biffen: Any proposal to extend the present scope of the Register of Members Interests would, in the first instance, be a matter for consideration by the Select Committee on that subject.

THE ARTS

Arts Council (Opera Expenditure)

Mr. Arnold asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if, pursuant to the answer of 2 April regarding expenditure by the Arts Council on opera in the English regions in 1985-86, he will list the companies, performances and other recipients of such Arts Council funds in that period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The list is as follows:

Opera	Allocation of grant 1985-86 £
English Bach Festival Trust	30,000
Handel Opera Society Limited	47,500
Opera North Limited	2,181,700
Regional Opera Trust Ltd. (Kent Opera)	715,000
Scottish Opera Limited	220,000
Welsh National Opera	2,260,000
Glyndebourne Productions Limited	320,000
Opera 80 Limited	200,000
Other Opera	120,000

My right hon. and noble Friend is satisfied that the allocations listed will enable these companies to continue to provide opera of a high standard to the regions.

Objects in Lieu of Taxation

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether, following his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 3 April, Official Report, columns 647-48, he will state the effect on any unused acceptances in lieu Vote balances of discontinuance of the administrative arrangement whereby such unused balances are transferred to the National Heritage Memorial Fund; and whether the standard accounting practice entails their cancellation by reversion to the Consolidated Fund.

Mr. Waldegrave: Unused AIL Vote balances are transferred to the National Heritage Memorial Fund and this practice has not been discontinued. Under this arrangement unspent balances do not have to be surrendered to the Consolidated Fund.

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether he will specify any pre-eminent objects and property which have been accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax since the beginning of the present financial year, together with the amount of tax satisfied in each case, and stating whether any objects accepted carried conditions as to destination.

Mr. Waldegrave: No offers in lieu of tax have been accepted since the beginning of the financial year. However, the sum of £167,786 has been paid from this year's acceptance in lieu vote in respect of the Geoffrey Keynes collection, which was accepted in lieu at the end of the last financial year at a total cost of £194,000, of which £26,214 was found from the 1984-85 Vote.

Calke Abbey

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether, following his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 2 April, Official Report, column 577, he will list the pre-eminent contents of Calke Abbey which were accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax, together with the amounts of tax satisfied in respect of them.

Mr. Waldegrave: The House and contents at Calke Abbey were accepted by the Government as a pre-eminent collection. There are more than 1,000 items on the inventory and it would be impracticable to list them in the Official Report. The amount of tax satisfied by the contents was £1·084 million.

TRANSPORT

Trunk Roads

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the number of jobs supported by the £120 million of expenditure on labour identified in the breakdown of the trunk road budget given in the Official Report, 21 March, column 541.

Mrs. Chalker: The Department does not keep records of this kind. The labour cost figure of £120 million is derived from analysis of accepted tenders, which show estimated costs rather than numbers to be employed. The latter can vary substantially depending on the size and nature of a contract, the amount of overtime worked and the working practices of individual contractors. However, assuming average labour costs and a 40-hour week, £120 million would represent some 10,000 to 15,000 man-years of work. This estimate relates only to labour directly employed on new construction. Additional jobs are supported by the other elements of trunk road expenditure.

Traffic Readings

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make arrangements to take traffic readings on the A21 and A259 trunk roads during the summer period.

Mrs. Chalker: Traffic flows on the A21 and A259 are already regularly monitored at various locations by the use of automatic traffic counters. This monitoring, which includes the summer period, is supplemented by periodic manual traffic counts. In addition this year we shall be taking traffic counts in connection with preparation of the proposed A259 Winchelsea and Rye bypass scheme.

Marylebone Station

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected reduction in the public service obligation stemming from the closure of Marylebone station and the diversion of services to Paddington.

Mr. David Mitchell: The public service obligation grant is paid to support the running of British Rail's passenger services as a whole. It is not attributed to individual routes or services. This means that any savings from individual rail closures do not lead automatically to a pound-for-pound reduction in the level of grant paid.

LRT (Concessionary Fares)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, upon the abolition of the Greater London council, boroughs will act jointly or separately in agreeing with London Regional Transport the arrangements for concessionary fares for the elderly on London Regional Transport services.

Mrs. Chalker: The London Regional Transport Act 1984 empowers the London Boroughs acting either jointly or separtely to enter into arrangements with LRT for the provision of travel concessions for the elderly. If the arrangements proposed are not uniform, the statutory reserve scheme will be brought into effect. The London Boroughs Association is continuing in its efforts to achieve a voluntary uniform scheme to replace that presently administered by the GLC. The co-operation of the Association of London Authorities and its member authorities, which has so far been withheld, will be essential to the achievement of such a scheme.

Pilotage

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of pilotage for a 50,000-tonne vessel in the port of Hull compared with Hamburg, Antwerp and Rouen.

Mr. David Mitchell: The pilotage costs for one vessel of 50,000 GRT entering Hull are £1,978. My Department does not have available the rates of pilotage charges for Hamburg, Antwerp or Rouen.

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that the proposed alterations in pilotage will lead to savings without reducing the safety of navigation.

Mr. David Mitchell: I believe that placing the responsibility for pilotage on harbour authorities is the best means of achieving this objective and of ensuring the provision of an efficient and cost-effective pilotage service to meet the requirements of safety.

Ports (Humber and Trent)

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many ships per year use the Humber ports and the Trent ports, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information is not available to my Department, but the annual numbers of visits by ships taking pilots in the pilotage districts of Goole, the Humber and the Trent are recorded in the annual summaries of "Pilotage Returns", copies of which are laid before Parliament.

Coastguard

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Coastguard's regular manpower strength; and what changes are planned in subsequent years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Coastguard's manpower strength at 1 April 1985 was 568. The planned figure for 1 April 1986 is the same. I have no current plans for further changes. Naturally the manpower levels for subsequent years will have to be considered in the context of the Government's overall objectives for Civil Service manpower; but it will be my aim to ensure that the Coastguard's operational capability remains at its present level.

ENVIRONMENT

Rates

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when he calculates targets for rate-borne expenditure and rate limits he takes into account local authority contributions to inner city partnership and urban aid schemes which are funded as to 75 per cent. by his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: The calculation of local authority expenditure targets for 1985-86 is described in annex D of the Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1985-86. For authorities selected for rate limitation for 1985-86, expenditure levels, on which rate limits were based, were set at the same level in cash as the authorities' 1984-85 budgets; authorities then had the opportunity to seek re-determination of their expenditure levels.

Football (Spectator Violence)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the date on which each representative organisation submitted its comments on his consultation document, "Football Spectator Violence: Report of an Official Working Party"; and which organisations have declined to comment.

Mr. Macfarlane: The representative organisations I met submitted their written comments on the following dates:

	Dates
The Football League	17 October 1984
The Professional Footballers Association	27 November 1984
The Association of District Councils	20 December 1984
The Football Trust	8 January 1985
The Football Grounds Improvement Trust	8 January 1985
The Association of County Councils	14 January 1985
The Football League Executive Staffs' Association	12 February 1985
The Association of Metropolitan Authorities	20 February 1985
The Scottish Football Association	4 March 1985
The Scottish Football League	4 March 1985
The Football Association	11 March 1985
The Association of Chief Police Officers	13 March 1985
The Superintendents Association	13 March 1985
The Police Federation	13 March 1985
The Magistrates' Association	20 March 1985
The London Boroughs Association	2 April 1985

I have yet to receive the written comments of the Welsh Football Association, nor have I yet received any comments from representatives of Opposition parties. No organisation has declined to submit comments.

Birds (Special Protection Areas)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those areas designated as areas of special protection of birds.

Mr. Waldegrave: Two areas of special protection have been designated under section 3 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981—Gull Island, Warren Shore and Needs Ore Point (Hampshire) and Berry Head (Devon).

Birds of Prey

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of each species of bird of prey exported in 1984 and so far in 1985.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is given in the following table:

Species	Common Name	Export in 1984	Export in 1985 to date
Parabuteo Unicinctus	Harris Hawk	2	2
Falco Peregrinus	Peregrine Falcon	9	1
Falco Cherrug	Saker Falcon	1	—
Tyto Alba	Barn Owl	1	—
Bubo Capensis Mackinderi	Cape Eagle Owl	2	—
Bubo Bubo Bengalensis	Great Eagle Owl	2	—
Falco Jugger	Lugger Falcon	2	—
Falco Rusticolus	Gyr Falcon	4	—
Buteo Buteo	Common Buzzard	1	—
Aquila Rapax	Tawny Eagle	1	—
Accipiter Gentilis	Goshawk	1	—
Neophron Perchenopterus	Egyptian Vulture	1	—

Local Authorities (Planning Permission)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make regulations under the Town and Country Planning Acts to require that a local authority shall hold a public local inquiry before granting planning permission to itself for development of its own land where such development would be in conflict with an approved local plan or where no local plan has yet been approved for the area.

Mr. Macfarlane: Section III of the Local Government Act 1972 already enables a local authority to hold a public local inquiry in any case where it considers this would help it in coming to a properly informed decision. I have no evidence to suggest that it would be right or necessary to require such an inquiry to be held in every case.

Official Visits

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to which local authority areas he and Ministers in his Department are planning official visits in the next two months; and if he will give the dates and purpose of each visit.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Caravan Parking, Widdrington

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what objections from third parties have been received by his Department in respect of an appeal against conditional planning permission by Castle Morpeth borough council for use of land for the temporary parking of caravans at land adjoining No. 1, Bus Row Cottages, Widdrington village.

Mr. Macfarlane: Three letters of objection have been received from residents of Bus Row Cottages. A petition of support signed by five residents of the caravan site has also been submitted.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any decision has yet been announced or taken as a result of the local inquiry held by his inspector at Morpeth on 10 April in respect of an appeal against an enforcement notice issued by Castle Morpeth borough council relating to the stationing of residential caravans at The Junction Inn, Widdrington.

Mr. Macfarlane: By agreement with the parties to this appeal, the inquiry scheduled for 10 April was cancelled because the council decided on 4 April to grant planning permission for an alternative site and the appellant consequently withdrew the appeal.

Local Government Bill (Scientific and Technical Services)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Fourth Report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology on the Local Government Bill (Scientific and Technical Services) in so far at it dealt with the organisation of local government.

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall need to study the report in detail, and my right hon. Friend will in due course be responding to the Committee in the normal way.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent reports have been made available to him on the subject of the disposal of nuclear waste; whether any changes in policy on the matter are envisaged; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend regularly receives reports from the Radioactive Wastes Management Advisory Committee normally in June or July each year. In addition, he receives much advice from official and other sources.

Last November he also received the report of the independent review of disposal of radioactive waste in the north-east Atlantic, commissioned jointly with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress and chaired by Professor Holliday. My right hon. Friend set out the Government's response to the report in a written reply on 13 December 1984, at columns 579-80, to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire South-East (Mr. Lightbown). As recommended in the report, my Department is now undertaking a study of the best practicable environmental options for the disposal of different types of low and intermediate level radioactive wastes. The results will be taken fully into account in the further development of policy.

Reema Houses

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many reports on Reema type houses he has received from the Building Research Establishment in the last 12 months; and if he expects any more.

Sir George Young: The Building Research Establishment published a report on Reema hollow panel houses in June 1984. It is now engaged in a study of large panel building systems, which will include investigation of some more recent houses of Reema construction. The findings of these further studies will be published in due course.

Rate Precepts

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which four county councils in England raised their rate precepts by the greatest percentage between 1981-82 and 1985-86; which four had the smallest increase; and what in each case was the percentage change.

Mr. Waldegrave: The four shire county councils in England which raised their precepts by the greatest percentage between 1981-82 and 1985-86 were:

	per cent.
Nottinghamshire	71
Derbyshire	67
Humberside	60
Avon	50

The four with the smallest increases were:

	per cent
Lincolnshire	25
Dorset	25
Suffolk	26
Buckinghamshire	26

Ordnance Survey Advisory Board

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the second annual report of the Ordnance Survey Advisory Board.

Mr. Waldegrave: The second annual report of the Ordnance Survey Advisory Board is published today. Copies have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and are available from Ordnance Survey on purchase.

Salmon Fisheries (Conservation)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences have been (a) applied for and (b) issued in England and Wales under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the shooting of goosanders and mergansers to prevent serious damage to salmon fisheries.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Landscape Areas Special Development Order

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to issue the consultation paper proposing the making of a new landscape areas special development order.

Mr. Macfarlane: I am issuing the consultation paper today and I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is doing likewise. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report (i) for each county council and (ii) for each district council in England and Wales (a) the total payments made in rate support grant for the year 1974-75, (b) an estimate of the payments shown in (a) above at present day prices and (c) the total payments made in rate support grant for the year 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1985, c. 413-22]: The figures for the authorities given in my answer of Tuesday 19 March 1985 should read as follows:

Authority	Column	Correct figure
New Forest	RSG payment 1974-75	1·8
Kettering	RSG payment 1984-85	2·8
East Staffordshire	RSG payment 1984-85	3·1
Waveney	1984-85 price base using GDP deflator	10·9
Mid Sussex	RSG payment 1974-75	2·8

Local Authority Services (Competition)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long he intends the period of consultation to be before he introduces legislation for competition in the provision of local authority services.

Mr. Waldegrave: The formal period for responses to the proposals set out in the Government's consultation paper issued on 14 February ends on 30 April.

Subject to this consultation my right hon. Friend proposes to introduce the necessary legislation in the next parliamentary Session.

Frogs

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the names and locations of those dealers and pet shops licensed to trade in frogs;

(2) what is the means by which he monitors the sale of frogs by licensed dealers and pet shops;

(3) what is the number of frogs sold by each licensed dealer and pet shop and the source from which the frogs are obtained.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department collects information on the extent of the trade in frogs from returns submitted by licensed traders. Licences issued by my Department do not impose any limitation on the numbers of frogs that may be sold, but traders are required to provide six-monthly returns giving details of the numbers sold and the sources from which they were obtained. The information is passed to the Nature Conservancy Council as data for the quinquennial review of species.

The information from these returns is summarised as follows:

Licensee	Licence issued	Location	Number sold	Source

Merseyside

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to maintain and develop the Merseyside Economic Development Company and its subsidiaries should the Merseyside county council be abolished;

(2) what plans he has to maintain and develop the Merseyside innovation centre should the Merseyside county council be abolished.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Any functions, rights and liabilities of the Merseyside county council in these respects which exists at abolition will pass to successor authorities. It will be for those authorities to consider whether to maintain these activities.

Harp and Hooded Seal Pup Skins (EC Directive)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will support the extension of the European Community directive banning the commercial import of harp and hooded seal pup skins and products when it expires in September.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government remain concerned about conserving seals. Conscious of public anxiety, we will be discussing a range of options for the extension of the existing ban with our European colleagues in the coming months, taking account of all the views that have been expressed.

In addition, the Government will support a Swedish proposal to include hooded seal in appendix II of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora (CITES), which will be considered at the fifth conference of parties to the convention which begins next week. This would provide a measure of permanent protection for all hooded seals—adults and their pups—because there can be no trade in a species listed in appendix II except under strict licensing controls.

PRIME MINISTER

Franks Committee

Q38. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister why she will not, in the light of further relevant documents which have become available, reconvene the Franks committee on the events leading to the Falklands conflict.

The Prime Minister: There is no reason to do so.

Football Hooliganism

Q45. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Prime Minister whether she has concluded discussions with the Football Association and other interested bodies on the subject of football hooliganism; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I met representatives of the Football Association and Football League on 1 April. At that meeting we agreed a number of measures against spectator violence which the football authorities will pursue, and which the Government will support, in part through legislation. The details were given by my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport in reply to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) on 4 April, at column 756. I have no present plans to meet the football authorities again.

Afghan Counter-revolutionary Organisations

Q60. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Prime Minister how many times during her term of office she has met representatives of the Afghan counter-revolutionary organisations.

The Prime Minister: I have met Afghan victims of the Soviet occupation on three occasions: on my visit to Pakistan in 1981; in 1982 when I received a delegation from the Afghanistan Support Committee; and in 1983 when I met a group of Afghans from the Logar valley, scene of an horrific massacre in September 1982.

Disarmament and Arms Control

Q78. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the policy contribution being made by Her Majesty's Government to the several negotiations currently taking place on disarmament and arms control.

The Prime Minister: We remain in close and regular touch with the United States and our other Allies over the US-Soviet talks in Geneva on nuclear and space arms. We fully support the agreed objective of the talks, which is to work out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and ending it on earth, at limiting and reducing nuclear arms and strengthening strategic stability.

The Government also continue to play an active part in the work of the Geneva conference on disarmament, especially the negotiations for a worldwide chemical weapons ban. At the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe, we continue to work with our allies for an agreement on practical confidence and security building measures designed to promote military openness which would reduce the likelihood of an outbreak of hostilities in Europe. At the MBFR talks in Vienna, we remain an active participant in negotiations aimed at achieving parity at lower levels of conventional forces in Europe.

Rating and Revaluation (Scotland)

Q97. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Prime Minister what representations she has received on the rating and revaluation systems in Scotland; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received about 760 such representations. By and large they express concern at both the effects of revaluation and the spending decisions of certain councils. I share much of this concern.

A review of local government finance and the rating system, in which my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for home affairs and the environment in Scotland is involved, was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment last October.

The purpose of the review is to see whether a fairer, simpler and more stable system of local government finance can be found which would strengthen the accountability of local authorities while maintaining a reasonable balance between the interests of central and local government. The review is of course covering alternatives to domestic rates and is also concerned with businesses which at present pay rates but do not have a corresponding voice in local government elections.

Commendable progress has been made, but there is much further work to be done over the next few months and it is not possible at this stage to predict the outcome.

Engagements

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 April.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 18 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to attend a banquet given by President Banda.

Asian Visit

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the outcome of her official visit to Malaysia.

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to Asian countries.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 16 April 1985, at columns 133-4.

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister what discussions she had with leaders of the Tamil minority during her recent visit to Sri Lanka.

The Prime Minister: During my visit to Sri Lanka I met several representatives of the Tamil community, including some holding ministerial and other Government positions, and a leader of the Tamil United Liberation Front, the former Member of Parliament, Dr. Tiruchelvam, with whom I had wide-ranging talks about the inter-communal problem.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will list the contracts successfully negotiated for Britain during her trip to the Far East and Saudi Arabia.

The Prime Minister: Gaining business in the very competitive ASEAN market needs persistence, a continuing presence, and products at the right price and quality. Many British companies are active in the countries that I visited, and I was able to support their efforts by underlining in my talks the strength of our industry particularly in biotechnology, communications, transportation, water schemes and aerospace. I am hopeful that my own talks and the development of closer bilateral relations in future will lead to greater success for our companies.

Mr. Spearing asked the Prime Minister if she will list the Ministers who accompanied her during her visits in south-east Asia.

The Prime Minister: None.

Indonesia (Human Rights)

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister what issues of human rights she raised with President Soeharto of Indonesia during her recent visit to his country.

The Prime Minister: My discussions with President Soeharto were confidential. But I can assure the hon. Member that the Indonesian Government are well aware of Her Majesty's Government's position on human rights.

Mr. Denis Pirie

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister in what capacity Mr. D. Pirie is employed in the Department of Trade and Industry; and if it was known when he was appointed to his present position, that he had been an official of the National Socialist Movement and of the National Front and that he had been convicted for trying to equip a private army for political purposes.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Pirie is employed as an export market research adviser; it was known that he had Fascist affiliations; it was not known that he had a conviction, and he was entitled, under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, not to disclose this fact.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Sayeed asked the Prime Minister what assessment the Government have made of the effect on the outcome of the recent coal industry dispute of Government policies introduced since 1979.

The Prime Minister: I am glad that the dispute is over and that the coal industry is quickly returning to normal working. Since 1979 the Government have invested over £4 billion in the coal industry, and have provided £4 billion in grant support. Our approach to the industry's future has always been very positive. I hope that everyone in the industry will now join us in working to secure a healthy, efficient and prosperous industry able to take advantage of the opportunities available to coal.

Constitution

Mr. Beith asked the Prime Minister if she will seek to enact in statutory form in all British territories, including the United Kingdom, provisions similar to those included in chapter 1 of the "Constitution of the Falkland Islands, Protection of Fundamental Rights and Freedom of the Individual"; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The constitutions of several of our dependent territories already contain a chapter providing for the protection of individual human rights. The Government have no plans to make provision with similar effect in respect of the United Kingdom.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Cardiovascular Disease (Diet)

38. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy or any other Government medical panel has reported a direct relationship between diet and the incidence of cardiovascular disease.

Mr. John Patten: Nine of the 10 experts who produced the report on diet and cardiovascular disease for the chief medical officer's committee on the medical aspects of food policy believed it likely that coronary heart disease would be reduced through a decrease in fat intake, although the panel agreed that evidence fell short of proof. They concluded that a relationship between diet and other cardiovascular diseases could be considered only on the balance of available evidence in each case.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list his Department's principal achievements since 1979.

Mr. Fowler: In the field of health, we have supported a National Health Service in England which is treating more patients a year than ever before. This objective had been achieved by providing record resources; taking steps to see that Health Service money is used to better effect; and developing a more modern health service better fitted to care for and prevent sickness and respond to changing demands.

The increased level of service provided is shown by the facts that, in England alone, comparing 1983 with 1978:

almost 667,000 more in-patient cases were treated; 250,000 more day cases were treated;
there were over 2½ million extra outpatient attendances;
667,000 more people were treated by district nurses or visited nurses or were visited at home by health visitors; in 1983, 1 million more children aged five and under attended child health clinics;
the number of coronary artery bypass grafts rose from 3,191 in 1978 to 9,443 in 1983, an increase of nearly 200 per cent. (United Kingdom figure);
there were almost 3½ million more courses of dental treatment;
the number of new renal patients accepted for treatment rose from 1,094 in 1978 to 1,846 in 1983, an increase of 69 per cent. The number of patients being treated for end stage renal failure rose from 5,390 to 10,266 an increase of 90 per cent. For most renal patients, the preferred method of treatment is by kidney transplant; the Government launched a campaign, in February 1984, to increase the number of organs becoming available for transplant and to provide the donor card scheme. During the following twelve months, kidney transplants rose by 30 per cent., from 1,089 to 1,415 (United Kingdom figures).

This improved performance has been supported by record spending on the health service. Total spending has increased from £6½ billion in 1978-79 to a projected £14½ billion in 1985-86. By 1984-85, expenditure had increased by more than 20 per cent. measured against general inflation. These extra resources have been more than enough to meet the growth in demand resulting from the increasing numbers of elderly people. Capital spending has been increased, in real terms, following a cut of one-third, in real terms, under the previous administration. As a result, 20 major new health building projects have begun and been completed since 1979. 130 further projects are currently being designed or are under construction. Health authorities are planning further developments worth over £213 million.

Against the background of these record levels of financial support, we are succeeding in achieving better value for money spent in the health service and thus in treating more patients than ever before. A key first step was to simplify the formal structure of the health service by abolishing area health authorities. Then, from 1 April 1985, we established independent family practitioner committees accountable to me. Many other steps have been taken or are in train to achieve clearer accountability and better management within the health service. These include:

- annual accountability reviews by Ministers of the performance of regional health authorities at which objectives are set and RHAs held to account for their achievements. The review process has now been extended to District Health Authorities and their Units;
- the appointment — as recommended by the (Griffiths) management inquiry report on NHS management which we commissioned—of general managers, with personal responsibily for performance, at regional and district level and in hospitals and other units; and the revision of management structures to complement this;
- Rayner-style efficiency scrutinies on particular aspects of health service activity. The first round of scrutinies has shown scope for considerable savings by better management and more effective use of resources. Of the seven scrutiny reports published so far, one report alone (on cheaper ways of advertising for staff) is likely to achieve savings of up to £4 million per annum. A second round is being launched;
- the development of performance indicators to enable health authorities to compare their services with those provided by other authorities; a second, more sophisticated package of indicators is about to be issued;
- a major review of NHS information requirements and systems (the Körner review): health authorities are now implementing the results;
- the development of management budgeting, involving doctors, to improve resource usage and control;
- a report on the disposal of under-used and surplus land and buildings, following which health authorities are re-examining their property holdings to free resources for patient care;
- competitive tendering for hospital support services to test their cost-effectiveness: significant savings (£9·4 million on 72 contracts) are being realised for patient care;
- the introduction of health authority cost improvement programmes: health authorities planned to make cost improvements valued at £100 million in 1984-85, and are planning further improvements for 1985-86;
- better arrangements for the planning and control of manpower so that while the number of patients treated in the National Health Service has increased, the overall level of staff employed in the health service had levelled out by 1983 and fell in 1984. Nonetheless, by September 1984 there were over 4,000 more doctors and dentists and nearly 47,000 more nurses and midwives than in September 1978.

Within my Department I have, as recommended by the Griffiths report, set up a Health Service Supervisory Board to advise me on major issues and appointed as chairman of the National Health Service Management Board a senior industrialist with outside management experience to improve the management performance of the Service.

These improvements in management and efficiency are directed at not simply more treatment for patients but also a better quality of service. This is reflected not only in developments in acute services mentioned above but also in progress made towards the development of the priority services identified in "Care in Action":

- health authorities enabled to make continuing payments to local authorities and voluntary organisations to provide community care for people moving out of long-stay hospitals;
- a 50 per cent. real increase in joint finance between 1978-79 and 1984-85; and legislation to make joint finance funds available for educational and housing projects;
- Government funding for projects to re-locate long-stay patients moving out of hospitals and in particular to provide homely accommodation for mentally handicapped children in the community;
- a real increase of over 35 per cent. in the value of DHSS general grants to voluntary bodies and new central initiatives involving the voluntary sector such as the drug misuse initiative;
- the first major legislative reform in the field of mental health since 1959, including the setting up of the Mental Health Act Commission;
- the establishment and extension for a further period of the Rampton hospital review board;
- the establishment of three experimental National Health Service nursing homes and measures to improve standards in residential homes for elderly people;
- an initiative to promote fresh voluntary projects for under fives.

The Government have also given a major push to the prevention of health and social problems. We have seen a reduction of 30 per cent. in perinatal mortality between 1979 and 1983; reductions in cigarette smoking; the development of intermediate treatment for young people in trouble; central grants for projects to tackle drug abuse; new campaigns on rubella immunisation, the ante-natal care of Asian mothers and babies, and drug misuse; and other measures to combat glue sniffing and drug and alcohol misuse.

In the field of primary care we have ended opticians' unjustified monopoly in the dispensing of glasses, allocated £9 million specifically to improve primary care in inner cities, and reduced the drug bill by a selected list of prescribable medicines in certain categories. In 1983-84 there were over two thousand more family doctors in England and nearly 1,800 more dentists than in 1978-79. The average family doctor's patient list size had reduced from 2,312 in 1978 to 2,116 in 1983.

Apart from the statutory services, we have welcomed the development and expansion of the private sector of health care. The compulsory phasing out of pay beds from National Health Service hospitals has been ended and we are working to encourage closer co-operation between private hospitals and the National Heath Service for the benefit of patients. About 4½ million people now choose to cover themselves with private medical insurance, providing a useful supplement to the total sum of health care and relieving pressure on the National Health Service. Their right to make such extra provision is one which this Government have vigorously defended.

In the field of social security we have more than honoured our pledge to maintain the real value of pensions and other long-term benefits. Between November 1978 and November 1984 pensions were raised by 83·6 per cent. while the Retail Price Index rose by 77·2 per cent. Pensions are now uprated in line with the actual movement in prices — an improvement on the forecast method which was previously used and which led to inaccuracy and uncertainty. The Christmas Bonus for pensioners, which was not paid in 1975 or 1976, has been made permanent through an Act of Parliament. From November 1984 periods after people reach age 80 have counted towards the 10 year residence test for the over 80's non-contributory retirement pension. Before that date people entering, or returning, to the United Kingdom after the age of 70 were usually unable to qualify no matter how long they lived in this country afterwards.

We have fully protected the value of war pensions and war widows' pensions and have maintained the preference over the civilian pensions. War widows' pensions and allowances are no longer taxable. A new mobility allowance for war pensioners has been introduced and higher rates of benefit are paid under the new scheme. We have made significant improvements to the age allowances payable to war widows, especially those aged 80 and over.

For families, under this Government, child benefit and one-parent benefit have reached their highest ever value in real terms. The real value of Family Income Supplement has also been increased.

Expenditure on cash benefits to the long-term sick and disabled has increased by about 30 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. Significant improvements in the benefits have been made:

- mobility allowance has been made tax free and has doubled in cash;
- the earnings limit for invalid care allowance has been doubled;
- there has been a real increase in the therapeutic earnings limit for those on incapacity benefit;
- the "invalidity trap" has been removed;
- the proposed severe disablement allowance has ended the controversial household duties test;
- the scope of the industrial injuries occupational deafness scheme (in particular its coverage) has been extended.

The supplementary benefit schemes rules have been published in regulations and in publicly available guidance for staff. Substantial improvements in benefits have taken place:

- an increase in the real value of the scale rates;
- automatic entitlement to the long-term scale rate for men over 60;
- a reduction in the qualifying period for the payment of the long-term scale rate from two years to one;
- an increase in the amount of savings people on supplementary benefit can have while still drawing full benefit; and a new disregard for the surrender value of life insurance policies;
- increased help in meeting fuel costs: we expect to spend about £400 million in 1984-85 on heating additions which are now paid automatically to supplementary benefit householders aged 65 and over or with a child under 5;
- equal access for men and women to supplementary benefit;
- a tapered earnings disregard for single parents.

During 1984, the Government set in train the most wide-ranging review of the social security system since the Beveridge report over 40 years ago. Four review teams were appointed to examine the four main benefit areas — provision for retirement, supplementary benefit, housing benefit, and benefits for children and young people. In parallel with this, we instituted a review of provision for maternity and we also commissioned a major new survey, by the Office of Population Census and Surveys, into the prevalence of the needs arising from disablement.

The review has been conducted in a uniquely open way. Three of the main review teams were chaired by DHSS Ministers and the fourth—the housing benefit review—had an independent chairman. Each chairman was assisted by two outside members in assessing the evidence and analysing the issues raised. All four review teams invited written and oral evidence; over 4,000 individuals and organisations responded by submitting written evidence, and 19 public sessions were held at which the teams led by Ministers heard and discussed oral evidence. In addition, the housing benefit review team heard oral evidence at informal meetings with interested organisations and individuals.

The review has led to extensive public debate about the social security system and has enabled Ministers to hear at first hand views and ideas for change from a wide spectrum of opinion. The Government are now considering the conclusions of the review and proposals for change and we will be publishing these as soon as possible. The main objectives underlying our considerations are: to secure the most effective use of the huge resources directed to social security, now running at about £40 billion a year (some 30 per cent. of all public spending); to ensure that resources are directed to those who need help most; to simplify what has become an extremely complicated system; and to improve its administration.

Within my own Department, measurers to improve operational efficiency have helped to reduce staff from over 98,000 in 1979 to 93,361 in March 1985, despite an increased workload. We have reduced the number of social security regions from 12 to seven, implemented a programme of devolution of work, reorganised internal audit to increase efficiency, and introduced a system of budgetary control for certain administrative expenditure. In the Department's headquarters, I have instituted a management accounting system which seeks to clarify organisational objectives and monitor their achievement. At the same time, the headquarters staff of the Department has been reduced by 20 per cent. since 1979.

For the longer term, we have published consultative proposals for a social security operational strategy which will make full use of computerised information at national and local level to improve services for the public. Early projects within the strategy providing microcomputing facilities in DHSS local offices and improved enquiry facilities through terminals in unemployment benefit offices are being developed for implementation in the next 12 months.

As well as being more efficient, we are also providing a better service to the public. For example, nearly half of our local offices have set up a working group on service to the public; a freefone enquiry service has been introduced to answer social security enquiries; 112 staff found from efficiency savings have been allocated to local offices exclusively to improve service to the public and provide better information; postal claiming has been introduced for supplementary benefit for unemployed claimants and is being extended to other groups shortly; and applicants for legal aid can now provide information by post instead of at a local office interview.

Benefits (Take-up)

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the social security benefits for which take-up has proved higher than expected.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible at this stage to separate out with precision the effect of increased take-up from other factors influencing increased expenditure on social security benefits in such areas as invalidity benefit, housing benefit and supplementary benefit for board and lodging (including residential care and nursing homes). However the number of people claiming mobility allowance, attendance allowance and severe disablement allowance has proved consistently higher than expected.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list, showing by social security regions, for each year since 1981 the number of visits made by local officers to supplementary benefit claimants and the number of such visits made other than in respect of a new claim.

Mr. Whitney: The numbers of effective visits made to supplementary benefit claimants in each Region for each year since 1981 are set out in the tables. The number of regions was reduced from nine to seven in 1982.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners have still to receive their 1984 Christmas bonus arising from the delays caused by the strike at his Department's offices in Newcastle.

Mr. Whitney: The 1984 Christmas bonus exercise was completed satisfactorily and broadly on time. I understand that one of my hon. Friend's constituents failed to receive the bonus because she had moved house and the payment was sent to her old address. When the local office was notified of the mistake the payment was retrieved and passed on to the constituent. If my hon. Friend is aware of any other problems in connection with the 1984 Christmas bonus perhaps he would let me have details.

Child Care Law

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will extend the deadline for comments on the inter-departmental working party review of child care law to 30 June.

Mr. John Patten: I have authorised an extension of the deadline for comments on the discussion papers prepared by the working party from 30 April to 31 May, and am writing to my hon. Friend about this matter.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received advocating extension of the deadline for receipt of comments on the inter-departmental working party review of child care law.

Mr. John Patten: We have received representations from the Family Welfare Association and the Law Society; our officials have received similar requests from the Association of County Councils, British Agencies for Adoption and Fostering, Family Rights Group and the National Council of One Parent Families.

Benefits

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many persons were in receipt of housing benefit in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth in each year from 1979 to 1984;

(2) how many persons received rate rebates in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth in each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available in the precise form requested. It is estimated that the numbers of households receiving rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth, including Cumbernauld new town, were as follows:

	Rent rebate	Rent allowance	Rate rebate
1979-80	3,030	3	4,080
1980-81	3,370	10	5,220

1981-82	3,970	16	5,540
1983-84	8,380	72	8,500

* From November 1982 for some and from April 1983 for all cases, assistance with rent and rates formerly met through supplementary benefit was transferred to housing benefit.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons received supplementary benefit in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth in each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 27 March at column 255.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons received family income supplement in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth in each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not available. Family income supplement claims are dealt with by one centre at Blackpool and no information is maintained about claims from particular local areas.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has taken into account, in deciding the future of single payments under the supplementary benefits scheme, representations made by organisations providing help to low-income people in respect of energy-saving measures such as draught-proofing and insulation.

Mr. Whitney: We have received a large number of representations on a wide variety of subjects, including supplementary benefit single payments for draught-proofing in the course of our review of social security. We are currently considering our conclusions of the review, taking account of those representations and also of the review's main aims — to ensure that the very large resources devoted to social security are used to the best effect and to see that those in most need of financial help receive it.

Rayner Scrutinies

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report each of the scrutinies carried out by Sir Derek Rayner on behalf of his Department, listing the cost to the Department in each case.

Mr. Fowler: Eighteen efficiency scrutinies have so far been completed in the Department of Health and Social Security. These scrutinies were conducted by the Department itself under the guidance of, initially, Lord Rayner and currently, Sir Robin Ibbs. The subjects scrutinised and the cost of each study, are as follows:

1. Arrangements for Paying Social Security Benefits	23,000
2. Payment of benefit to Unemployed People	*
3. Final Relevant Year	12,000
4. DHSS Activities in Support of Health Care Exports	15,300
5. Handling of Correspondence in DHSS and OPCS	30,000
6. Validation of NI Contribution Records	20,000
7. Review of Statistical Services	23,000
8. Forms into Shape—An Analysis of forms use in DHSS	33,150
9. Review of Personnel Work	151,900
10. Payment of Benefit to People in Hospital	25,000
11. Legal Aid Assessment	*
12. Wheelchair Purchase and Repair	13,000
13. The Recovery of Overpaid Benefit	18,600
14. Consultancy, Inspection and Review Capacity	48,000
15. Government Supervision of Occupational Pension Schemes	*
16. Identifying and Developing Internal Talent	24,873
17. Administrative and Legislative Burdens	12,050
18. Accommodation	25,500

* Joint scrutinies with other Departments — DHSS costs not separately identified.

Nine similar scrutinies have also been carried out in the Health Service, the costs of which were borne by various health authorities. They are as follows:

1. Use of Non-Ambulance Transport	7,500
2. Non-Emergency Ambulance Service	7,232
3. Central Stores Policy	7,666
4. Residential Accommodation	17,036
5. Recruitment Advertising	11,376
6. Collection of Income Due to Health Authorities	*
7. Cost of Catering in the NHS	14,424
8. Use of Forms	2,380
9. Collection of Fees by Health Authorities under Road Traffic Act 1972	14,976

* Not costed.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how his Department's calculation, published in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on statutory sick pay HC45, that employers would pay out £615 million in statutory sick pay in 1983-84 was made; how it was calculated that this would be £480 million more than would have been paid out through occupational sick pay schemes; and what is the estimated figure for the extension of statutory sick pay to 28 weeks.

Mr. Whitney: The figure of £615 million is based on an estimate of the number of weeks for which sickness benefit would otherwise have been paid plus an addition for married women and widows paying reduced rate contributions who were not eligible for sickness benefit but would be eligible for statutory sick pay. The figure of £480 million (£525 million when additional national insurance contributions are taken into account) represents the amount of extra sick pay it was estimated employers would pay out in the first full year of the SSP scheme compared with their previous payments of occupational sick pay. It is less than the total SSP paid out because employers who paid full pay to their employees when sick would not have paid out anything extra when SSP was introduced; while for employers who paid full pay less sickness benefit, the additional costs of SSP were assumed to be those of making sick pay up to full pay. More information about the way in which the estimates for SSP were calculated is given in the DHSS paper "Financial Effects of Statutory Sick Pay" dated April 1982. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

It is not possible to make reliable estimates of the additional costs to employers when SSP is extended to 28 weeks, because we do not have information on how much employers currently pay out in occupational sick pay for extended periods of sickness.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for severe disablement allowance have been received from people in Wales; and how many claims have been decided at the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: As at 12 March 1,330 claims for severe disablement allowance had been received in the Department's local offices in Wales of which 64 had been decided.

Health Authorities (Chairmen)

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be appointing new chairmen to district health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The term of office of some 183 chairmen of district health authorities ends on 31 March 1986 and we are currently seeking nominations for new chairmen. If hon. Members wish to recommend any individuals as chairmen I invite them to write to me by 3 June 1985. Reappointments and changes will be announced in due course.

Children (Visiting Policy)

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards the visiting of children in care and living with their families.

Mr. John Patten: We have reviewed this issue following the tragic death of Jasmine Beckford and the Chief Inspector of the Social Services Inspectorate has now written to all local authority Directors of Social Services in England advising them on the discharge of their responsibilities for these children. The text of his letter follows. It lays particular emphasis on the visiting of children who are subject to a care order or parental rights resolution but allowed to live at home with their family.

Good practice requires the regular and frequent visiting of such children. How often will depend on individual circumstances. The effect of paragraph 4 of this letter is to secure that, for example, children under five would be visited not less often than every six weeks, but in many cases visits would need to be much more frequent, indeed daily if necessary.

The Social Services Inspectorate propose an early inspection of the supervision of social workers in the assessment and monitoring of children in need of protection.

Following is the letter:

To: Directors of Social Services

9 April 1985

Dear Director

CHILDREN IN THE CARE OF A LOCAL AUTHORITY AND PLACED WITH THEIR FAMILIES

Grave public concern has been expressed about the circumstances of the death of Jasmine Beckford. I am writing to you at this stage, before a formal inquiry has begun, about a subject that is causing particular anxiety: the arrangements for ensuring the well-being of children in the care of a local authority subject to a care order or a parental rights resolution who are allowed to live with their own families.

2. The local authority has in such cases the powers and duties of a parent or guardian. Returning the child to the family must clearly be part of a planned process of rehabilitation. That process must include sufficient oversight to confirm that the child is likely to flourish and that its welfare is likely to be promoted by a permanent return to its family.

3. I am writing therefore to remind you of your responsibilities for such children and the essential requirement for social workers to visit and see such children in order to ensure their safety and well-being. A child should not be placed back with its family unless such visits can be ensured and a child's placement should not be changed by the parents without the local authority's agreement.

4. There is no specific legislative requirement concerning frequency of visiting such children. Nevertheless, conscientious discharge of the local authority's duties and of good professional practice demands regular and frequent contact between the responsible worker and the child, particularly in the early weeks of a child's return home. It may appear that frequent visiting is no longer necessary when the discharge of a care order or the rescinding of a parental rights resolution is being contemplated, but I strongly recommend that the frequency of visiting should not be less than that prescribed by Regulation 21 of the Boarding-Out of Children Regulations 1955.

5. Local authorities have a statutory duty to review the cases of all children in their care at least every six months. I recommend that, where a child in care is placed with its family, the placement be reviewed by a social services manager or appropriate professional officer within 2-4 weeks and thereafter as necessary. This review and subsequent reviews should examine all aspects of the child's well-being and should include first-hand reports by the social worker of visits to the family with particular reference to the physical and emotional development of the child, so that the authority can take an informed decision as to whether or not the child should remain with its family. The review might also wish to consider if there is a need for additional support to the family.

6. Social workers who have day to day responsibility for such children should be provided with the necessary support, guidance, supervision and management. You may wish to consider in addition administrative procedures to ensure that effective mechanisms exist to arrange for the removal of a child if necessary.

7. The purpose of this letter is to concentrate attention upon a small group of children who may be particularly vulnerable. You and your colleagues bear the heavy responsibility of identifying the individual children concerned and of acting appropriately. I hope that my recommendations will strengthen the implementation of policies of rehabilitating children in care with their natural families.

Yours faithfully,
W. B. UTTING,
Chief Inspector,
Social Services Inspectorate

DEFENCE

Australian Royal Commission Hearings (Transcripts)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to obtain a copy of the transcript of the Australian Royal Commission hearings (a) in London and (b) in Australia, with a view to placing it in the Library.

Mr. Butler: I will arrange for a copy of the Royal Commission's report to be placed in the Library when it is published. However, the full transcript of proceedings already runs to over 7,000 pages, and further evidence in Australia has still to be taken; I would not feel justified in placing so large a volume of material in the Library. In the meantime, copies of the very considerable number of United Kingdom documents and records relating to the nuclear trials programme in Australia which were given to the Royal Commission are now available in the Public Record Office.

Demonstrators (Complaints)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures are currently adopted by his Department for dealing with complaints from civilian peace or anti-missile demonstrators in the vicinity of Royal Air Force bases alleging ill-treatment while being arrested by American service personnel.

Mr. Lee: United States service personnel are not responsible for dealing with the activities of demonstrators outside the perimeters of MOD establishments, which is a matter for the civil police. United States personnel do not arrest intruders found within the perimeters of Defence establishments, but hand them over to a constable or other authorised British person who will then, if necessary, make an arrest. Any complaints about the actions of United States personnel in such instances are investigated by the United Kingdom and United States authorities and, where appropriate, legal or disciplinary action is taken in accordance with the agreement regarding the status of forces of parties to the North Atlantic treaty as implemented by the Visiting Forces Act 1952.

Head of Defence Sales

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce the appointment of the Head of Defence Sales.

Mr. Heseltine: I am pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. C. M. Chandler as the next Head of Defence Sales in succession to Sir James Blyth. Mr. Chandler will be seconded to the Ministry of Defence by his current employer, British Aerospace, for up to three years.

TRANSPORT

Car-Bicycle Accidents

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken by his Department concerning the culpability of motorists in car-bicycle accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The responsibility of any party involved in an accident is in many cases difficult to determine conclusively, for many factors may be involved, including, for example, weather and road conditions. The Department is, however, currently investigating through various studies the major contributory factors to cycling accidents with a view to identifying ways in which such accidents may be prevented.

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much each local authority spent on cycle facilites in 1984-85, showing capital and revenue spending separately.

Mrs. Chalker: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the effect of recent changes in the transport supplementary grant on the provision of facilities for cyclists.

Mrs. Chalker: I am not aware of any change in local authority commitment to cycling provision.

Local Authorities (Grant Bids)

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much grant was bid by each local authority in the 1985-86 transport policies and programmes process.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Mudd) on 14 November 1984, at columns 267-73.

Vehicle Excise Licence Campaign (Bromley and Camden)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many of his officials and officers of the Metropolitan police are engaged in the two-week vehicle excise licence campaign in the London boroughs of Bromley and Camden; what is the inclusive cost of deploying these officials; and if he will make it his policy within six months to report to the House the conclusions of the exercise to show (a) how many motorists pay a mitigated penalty, (b) how many motorists are prosecuted in the magistrates' courts and with what result, (c) in both instances, how much money is recovered and how much remains uncollected, and (d) the total inclusive costs to all official sources for expenditure incurred in the exercise.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Twenty-four members of staff from the London enforcement office are engaged either wholly or partly on the campaigns which my Department is currently carrying out in conjunction with the London boroughs of Bromley and Camden, at a staff cost of approximately £4,640. The campaigns are of one week duration. The Metropolice police are not involved. I will write to my hon. Friend when the outcome of these campaigns is known.

"The Bicycle and the Environment"

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the conclusions in the Federal German Government's study, "The Bicycle and the Environment", a copy of which has been set to him; and if he will authorise a similar study for the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the report issued two years ago on the reduction of ecological pressure by promoting the use of bicycles. There are no plans to commission a similar study here.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what resources his Department is providing for the working party of borough officers established by the London Boroughs Association which is assessing the effect of abolition of the Greater London council on highways and traffic matters in London.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Wednesday 17 April at column 178.

Stansted Airport (Inquiry)

Mr. Churchill asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments his Department provided to the recent public inquiry into the proposed development of Stansted airport as to (i) the impact on the public sector borrowing requirement of the capital cost of the proposed development of the airport itself (ii) the impact on the public sector borrowing requirement and the cost to public funds of the associated infrastructure costs including housing, sewerage and roads.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No evidence was given by my Department on the implications of the proposed developments for the public sector borrowing requirement. The evidence on costs is summarised in chapter 51 of the inspector's report.

Singapore Airlines

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to announce a decision on the application by Singapore Airlines to operate a scheduled service from Manchester.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The services for which SIA has applied do not fall within the terms of the existing air services arrangements. Consultations are therefore required between aviation authorities, and these are to take place at the beginning of May.

Bicycle Schemes

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, to allocate to the London boroughs the resources in transport supplementary grant to implement those bicycle schemes planned by the Greater London council.

Mrs. Chalker: It will be open to London boroughs, in the same way as the GLC, to support worthwhile schemes, and they will be eligible to seek transport supplementary grant in the same way as all other authorities.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the figure for actual expenditure on trunk roads in England in 1984-85; and how this compares with the net provision.

Mrs. Chalker: Latest outturn figures for the year show that gross spending on trunk roads was provisionally £820.5 million and, once an estimated £14.3 million of receipts are accounted for, we can expect the net total to be around £806.2 million. This is under £2 million—or less than 0·25 per cent.—short of the cash limit. Firm figures for the year are expected to be available in June but are unlikely to differ significantly from those given above. This is a very good result.

NORTHERN IRELAND

"Studying our Past"

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library particulars of the prize-winning projects in the annual "Studying our Past" schools history competition.

Mr. Scott: Yes; I am arranging for this to be done as soon as possible.

Armagh Prison (Strip Searches)

Mr McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh, in March; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being concluded; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely, making an appearance at Armagh court house on remand, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons, respectively.

Mr. Scott: During March 1985 a total of 59 strip searches were carried out on 35 prisoners, A life-sentence prisoner taking part in a pre-release programme was searched on 10 occasions; 15 prisoners were searched twice, and 19 were searched once. No prohibited articles were found during these searches and no prisoner refused to be searched. The searches were carried out in the following circumstances:

	Number
Attending Armagh remand court	—
Attending trial	1
Inter-prison visits	11
Pre-release programme	8
Home leave scheme	11
First committal on remand/to await sentence	9
First admission on sentence/final discharge	24
Bail court appearance	6
Total	59

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the three items of smuggled contraband so far found on women prisoners subject to strip searches in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh, were found on remand prisoners returning from appearing before the court in Armagh.

Mr. Scott: Two of the items were found during the routine reception search of two prisoners who were remanded in custody to the prison for the first time; and the third was found during a random search of a remand prisoner prior to her appearance at Armagh court house.

SCOTLAND

Morbidity (Lenihan Investigation)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish in the Official Report all advice notes which he or his officials received expressing concern about the methods adopted by Professor Lenihan in his recent investigation into morbidity in the Denny-Bonnybridge area.

Mr. John MacKay: Three letters have been received commenting on the methods adopted by the Lenihan review group, and copies of these have been placed in the Library.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, using information from local authorities' housing checklists and housing plans, he will give the number of local authority dwellings in each district at 31 March 1984 which were (a) built pre-1940 of non-traditional construction and require comprehensive modernisation and (b) built immediately post-war and up to 1955 of non-traditional construction and require comprehensive modernisation.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table, which shows the figures submitted by local authorities in their housing plan checklists for 1984.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, using information from local authorities' housing checklists and housing plans, he will produce a table showing the number of local authority dwellings in each district at 31 March 1984 which were built post-1955 of non-traditional construction and (a) require major repairs, (b) require partial modernisation and (c) require rewiring only.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table, which shows the figures submitted by local authorities in their housing plan checklists for 1984.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce a table showing the number of local authority dwellings in each district at 31 March 1984 which required treatment for (a) condensation, and (b) rising/penetrating damp.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table, which shows the figures submitted by local authorities in their housing plan checklists for 1984.

As problems with condensation and penetrating damp often occur together, the same dwelling may appear in both sets of figures.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Voluntary Schools

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if any problems remain outstanding in the diocese of Oxford concerning the making of instruments of government for voluntary schools in the diocese pursuant to the Education Act 1980.

Mr. Dunn: Various issues were raised in local consultations which are required before my right hon. Friend may make new instruments for such schools, and these issues have taken a little time to resolve. However, new instruments have now been made for most of the diocese's schools in Buckinghamshire, and the remainder, together with those for their schools in Berkshire and Oxfordshire, are expected to be made shortly.

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when it is anticipated that, pursuant to the Education Act 1980, new instruments of government will be completed for voluntary schools in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Dunn: There are 154 voluntary schools in Oxfordshire. New instruments have already been made for five, and those for the 124 schools under the diocese of Oxford will be made shortly. Draft instruments for the remainder are currently out for consultation and should all be finalised in good time for the 1 September 1985 deadline.

University Students

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what number of students were in full-time statu pupillari in universities in 1976-77 and each succeeding year; and what is his estimate of the number for 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The number of full-time university undergraduate students in Great Britain since 1976-77 are shown in the table:

	Thousands
1976-77	222
1977-78	232
1978-79	239
1979-80	245
1980-81	251
1981-82	253
1982-83	250
1983-84	244
*1984-85	241

* Provisional estimate.

Undergraduate numbers are not expected to change significantly in 1985-86.

Nursery Education

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now introduce legislation providing free state nursery education for all children under five years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's aim, that their plans for local authorities' expenditure should allow provision attributable to under-fives education to be maintained in real terms, as stated in the recent White Paper "Better Schools", is as realistic an aim as can be expected in the foreseeable future. Within this level of provision there is scope for local flexibility and for improvements in quality and cost-effectiveness.

Ethnic Minority Pupils

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations he has planned to have with directors of local education authorities about extending recruitment for greater numbers of teachers for pupils from ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Dunn: As my right hon. Friend informed the House on 14 March at column 452, he intends to consider with the education service and with representatives of the ethnic minorities ways in which a greater proportion of the teacher force might be recruited from ethnic minority groups. The exact form of the consultation has yet to be determined.

Ethnic Minorities (Departmental Appointments)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans in the near future to recruit or appoint to senior positions within his Department officials from ethnic minority communities.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department's promotion and recruitment procedures operate on the basis of merit and without reference to the ethnic origin of candidates. It is not possible, therefore, to say now whether future appointments to senior positions in the Department will include officials from ethnic minority communities.

Nursery School Places

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many nursery school places were available in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of pupils attending maintained nursery schools in England in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 were 48,477, 48,456, 48,154, 48,989, 49,551 and 49,406, respectively. Information on the number of nursery school places is not available; these figures represent the nearest equivalent—the number of places filled.

Handicapped Children

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implications of the decision of the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers to advise teachers not to accept handicapped children into mainstream schools unless resources are made available to provide proper care for them; and whether, in the light of this decision, he is now prepared to make resources available for the full implementation of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend would deprecate any discrimination against a child, whether in the provision of education or otherwise, on account of his or her handicap.

If a child who has special educational needs and is the subject of a statement under the Education Act 1981 is to be placed in an ordinary school, that placement must be compatible with his receiving the special educational provision that he requires, as specified in the statement. If a child is not the subject of a statement, his admission to a county or voluntary school is governed by the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the Education Act 1980.

The Government have already made available additional resources to assist with specific aspects of special education. We shall continue to look for other ways in which further funding might be found.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC (Spain and Portugal)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information about the costs of entry to the EEC of Spain and Portugal, not at present available to Her Majesty's Government, he expects to become available by the time the treaty of accession is ready for ratification.

Mr. Rifkind: The Commission estimates that at the end of transition enlargement will represent a cost to the Community budget as a whole of between 0·1 per cent. and 0·2 per cent. of the VAT own resource base annually. A comprehensive estimate of the costs of enlargement will be possible only in the light of developments between now and the end of the transition period. But as full information as possible, based on the latest available Commission figures, will be given to the House when it considers the treaty of accession.

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects El Salvador to provide the names of officers selected for training in the United Kingdom; and if the United Kingdom offer of training facilities has any time limit attached to it.

Mr. Rifkind: I have nothing to add to the reply my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) on 15 February at column 302.

PRIME MINISTER

Argentina (Trade Sanctions)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Prime Minister when the trade sanctions with Argentina will be lifted.

The Prime Minister: The Argentine Government could take a major step towards the normalisation of our bilateral relations by agreeing to the reciprocal lifting of the trade embargo. We have made a number of proposals, both bilaterally and through the European Community, to achieve this. Argentine Government have not yet responded constructively.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from James Fairclough Ltd. of Warrington, about the effect of trade sanctions against Argentina on its ability to import the high grade maize required for its products.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received representations from Allied Mills Ltd.—of which James Fairclough and Sons is a subsidiary—as well as from two hon. Members and a member of the public. They have been advised that we cannot make an exemption for Argentine maize from the general embargo on imports from Argentina without undermining its effectiveness.

South-East Asia Visit (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will give the total cost to public funds of her recent trip to the far east.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister what was the total cost to public funds of her tour of Asia and Saudi Arabia.

The Prime Minister: The current estimated cost to public funds of the recent visit to Asia and Saudi Arabia is £174,000. Most of this represents reimbursement to the Ministry of Defence for the use of an RAF aircraft.

Energy Efficiency and Conservation Policy

Mr. Wallace asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the co-ordination between the different Departments responsible for the implementation of energy efficiency and conservation policy..

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has responsibility for the Government's overall strategy for energy efficiency as well as for his Department's energy efficiency office. There are regular consultations between Departments on matters with energy efficiency impacts. The Government's publicity campaign is stimulating an upsurge of interest and activity in energy efficiency.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970, 1979 and the latest available date the numbers employed in the different sectors of the engineering and allied industries including motor cars and motor car components;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970, 1979 and the latest available date the numbers employed in (a) the steel industry, (b) coal mining, (c) other extractive industries and (d) the different sectors of manufacturing industry other than the engineering and allied industries and textiles and clothing;

(3) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970, 1979 and the latest available date the numbers employed in the different sectors of the textile industry and in clothing.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives, for June 1971 (1970 is not available), June 1979 and June 1984, the estimated number of employees in employment in Great Britain in each available class of the 1980 standard industrial classification (SIC) within the production industries.

More detailed analyses of employment estimates, by SIC group or activity heading, are available only from September 1981. The most recent figures, for December 1984, were published in table 1.4 of the labour market data section of the March 1985 issue of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed currently, or to the latest date known, in hotels, restaurants, leisure centres, public houses, wine bars and brasseries, clubs, cafes, sandwich and snackbars, coffee and tea rooms, catering at tourist attractions, university and college catering, school meals service, hospital catering service (including those employed in private hospitals), hospital domestic services, contract catering and cleaning services, catering departments in the public sector, catering departments in the private sector, armed forces, police forces, prison services and fire services, catering education and training and consultancy, marketing, promotion and inspection companies and boards.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department's employment estimates are classified according to the standard industrial classification. The following table presents estimates of the number of employees employed in the hotel and catering industries identified in that classification, and in contract catering and cleaning services.

Employees in Employment in Great Britain in December 1984

Industry	Employees
Restaurants, snackbars, cafes etc	181,400
Public houses and bars	248,600
Night clubs and licensed clubs	151,300
Canteens and messes	119,300
Hotel trade	237,700
Other tourists or short stay accommodation	24,500
Contract catering and cleaning services	210,300

The Department's statistics do not identify those engaged in catering occupations in other industries. Such information is available from the 1981 census of population and is published in table 13 of the census publication "Economic Activity: Great Britain" (CEN 81 EA), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many men on Merseyside have been unemployed for more than 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is available in the Library. It is provisionally estimated that there were 56,600 males in the Merseyside metropolitan county who had been unemployed for more than 12 months at 14 March 1985. The figure includes an estimate for those whose claims are not dealt with by computer.

Crown and Non-Crown Workplaces

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if the same criteria regarding the issue of improvement and prohibition notices are applied by the Health and Safety Executive to (a) Crown and (b) non-Crown workplaces.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees work in (a) Crown and (b) non-Crown workplaces which are under the jurisdiction of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1983, the latest year for which an estimate can be made, it is estimated that 1·7 million employees worked in Crown workplaces and 12·8 million employees worked in non-Crown workplaces under the jurisdiction of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment which organisations have made representations to him that immunity from health and safety legislation should be removed from Crown workplaces.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I met the right hon. Member and others with a deputation from the General Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union on 17 April to discuss their representation on exemption of the Crown from prosecution under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and from the provisions in that Act relating to improvement and prohibition notices.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions and in what context he has formally reviewed the question of removing immunity from Crown workplaces in respect of health and safety legislation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Ministerial consideration was given in 1983 to whether there was any shortfall in health and safety at work standards in Crown employment due to the Crown's exemption from prosecution under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and from the provisions in that Act relating to prohibition and improvement notices. This was in response to a point raised during a debate in the House on health and safety at work on 11 March 1983.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now seek to remove the immunity in respect of health and safety requirements from all Crown workplaces.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Crown is already bound by the general duties of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, and is bound to comply with regulations made under the Act unless specific exemptions are made. We have no plans at present to seek to remove the Crown's exemption from the provisions of the Act relating to improvement and prohibition notices and from prosecution in the courts. However, we have undertaken to look carefully at the dossier of evidence on the effects of Crown immunity which the right hon. Member has promised to send me.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the resources allocated to the Health and Safety Executive in each year of its existence stating them in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms; and if he will give the number of inspections carried out in each year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The resources allocated to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive have been published each year in Supply Estimates. When these are deflated using the single index most widely used for such purposes, the gross domestic product deflator, the figures are as shown in the following table. When using the figures in column (3) it should be remembered that a number of elements within the Health and Safety Commission/Executive's budget have not moved in line with the gross domestic product over this period.

Year (1)	Supply Estimate (2)	At 1983-84 prices (3)
1974-75	12,311	37,193
1975-76	27,972	67,565
1976-77	38,610	82,149
1977-78	44,647	83,609
1978-79	46,836	79,383
1979-80	55,757	80,807
1980-81	70,970	86,760
1981-82	80,816	89,996
1982-83	81,335	84,990
1983-84	87,873	87,873
1984-85	90,298	86,410
1985-86	93,283	85,035

The numbers of visits made by Health and Safety Executive inspectors in each year from 1975 (the first full year of the Executive's existence) to 1983 are as follows:

Year	Number of Visits
1975	341,000
1976	307,000
1977	279,000
1978	281,000
1979	289,000
1980	291,000
1981	270,000
1983	241,000

Visits may be made for a variety of purposes and vary greatly in duration. Care should also be taken in interpreting movements in figures for total visits because of changes in recording methods over the years and changes in the priority given to different types of visits with varying average duration.

Hospitals (Kitchens)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment in how many hospitals visited by the health and safety inspectors there was evidence of unclean kitchens; and how many outbreaks of food poisoning have been reported in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Health and Safety Executive inspectors do not have the enforcement responsibility for unclean hospital kitchens. Hospital kitchens are visited by the environmental health officers of local authorities. This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The reporting of outbreaks of food poisoning is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Health and Safety

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces came under the jurisdiction of the Health and Safety Executive; what percentage have been visited by health and safety inspectors; what percentage of those visited were issued with improvement or prohibition notices; what percentage of those issued with notices responded satisfactorily; what percentage were monitored, and in what way, so as to assess the level of the response; and if in each case he will distinguish between (a) Crown and (b) non-Crown work places.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Paul Dixon

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment why Mr. Paul Dixon of 6 Fleetway, Worksop, who quit his job at Manton colliery during the strike last June and who has had two other jobs since is still classed as a striking miner and has been refused benefit now he is unemployed again.

Mr. Alan Clark: Mr. Dixon is not classed as a striking miner. He has told us that he is working part-time and payment of benefit has been withheld whilst the independent adjudicating authorities consider his entitlement under social security regulations that cover part-time working—the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Regulation 1983, regulations 7(1)(g).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Craigen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the total annual cost of mortgage interest tax relief paid to mortgagors who are taxed above the standard rate for each financial year from 1982-83 to 1984-85 in Scotland;

(2) if he will produce a table showing the annual total amount of mortgage interest tax relief for (a) Great Britain, *(b)*Scotland, (c) England and (d) Wales from 1982-83 to 1984-85 and also the average mortgage tax relief per mortgagor in (i) Great Britain, (ii) Scotland, (iii) England and (iv) Wales for the same period.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Construction Contracts

Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the use of variation of price clauses in Government construction contracts.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Government have decided to revert to the pre-1973 practice of agreeing to variation of price (VOP) clauses in their construction contracts only when these run for more than two years. The existing arrangements, which permit VOP in contracts which run for more than one year, were introduced at a time of high and rapidly escalating inflation. The Government's financial policies have brought inflation under control and will ensure that it remains under control.

This decision follows consultation with the construction industry, and careful consideration within the Government.

Departments will introduce the new arrangements as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

Kelmscott House

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts when the Minister for the Arts expects to announce a decision on the Greater London council's compulsory purchase order on Kelmscott House.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Energy which theatre groups he has sponsored over the past year to spread the message to schools about the need for the efficient use of energy; what has been the cost to date of sponsoring these groups; what information he has as to the number of children who have seen the performances; how he assesses the effectiveness of these performances; what are his future plans for sponsoring such groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has sponsored four such theatre groups so far this academic year who have performed to over 120,000 children. It is planned to tour at least three groups around United Kingdom schools during the autumn term 1985 to coincide with the production of new schools materials covering many aspects of energy.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, be reference to the criteria set out in the answer of 1 April, Official Report, column 902, he will indicate the improvement in energy efficiency achieved in the United Kingdom over the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: Preliminary analysis indicates that the United Kingdom's energy efficiency improved by about 3 per cent. during 1984, the latest period for which figures are available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Third World Countries

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much Government-funded research and development into agriculture is of identifiable benefit to Third world countries.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Young Farmers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what European Economic Community aid is available for young farmers and new entrants into agriculture;

(2) when he intends to implement the European Economic Community scheme for aid to young farmers and new entrants into agriculture.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Research and Development

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if his Department's estimates of publicly-funded agricultural research and development given in the debate on 13 March, Official Report, column 412, included the amount spent in the university sector;

(2) what representations he has received about the cut in his Department's budget for research and development; and what proportion of these favoured an increase in the research and development budget;

(3) if he will make a statement outlining the main objectives of Government-supported agricultural research; and what long-term plans existed for such research.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

London Joint Board for Fire

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the parameters he intends to use when assessing the first three years of the life of the proposed London Joint Board for Fire whether or not the joint board budget and manpower complement is acceptable.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Clauses 66 and 83 of the Local Government Bill now before Parliament provide for my right hon. and learned Friend to exercise transitional precept and manpower controls over the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. He intends to use them to ensure that it can discharge economically, effectively and efficiently its statutory functions and maintain nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Marple Dale Hospital, Stockport

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the sale of the Marple Dale hospital, Stockport, and associated land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that North-Western regional health authority has accepted the highest tender received for the Marple Dale hospital, Stockport, and completion of the sale is expected in the next five weeks. I suggest my hon. Friend contacts the chairman of the regional health authority for any further information he requires.

Satellite Broadcasting

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to make a statement about arrangements for direct satellite broadcasting; and when he intends to permit members of the public to buy reception equipment to receive existing programmes being broadcast in neighbouring countries in the English language.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for the development of direct broadcasting by satellite lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretay of State for the Home Department. Members of the public who wish to operate equipment to receive programmes broadcast for direct reception by satellite from neighbouring countries are free to do so under the terms of their existing television licences, although there are at present no such programmes being broadcast. As stated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 18 April, the Government are urgently considering their policy towards the licensing of new master antennae television systems which can receive non-DBS services and hope to make its conclusions known shortly.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account he is taking of the dependence of certain areas on employment in clothing and textiles in deciding his policy on future levels of textile and clothing imports in the context of the renegotiation of the multi-fibre arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The Government will take full account of all the employment aspects of restricting textile and clothing imports, including employment in the textile and clothing industries, employment indirectly affected in other industries, and regional concentrations of employment.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths attributable to the pertussis vaccine were reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines for the following years: 1964 to 1968, 1969 to 1974, 1975 to 1980 and 1981 to 1984; and how many such deaths occurred within 48 hours of administering the vaccine.

Mr. John Patten: The Committee on Safety of Medicines has received the following yellow card reports of deaths where an association with pertussis vaccine was suspected:

Years	Total deaths	Deaths occurring during the first two days following vaccination
1964 to 1968	10	8
1969 to 1974	17	3
1975 to 1980	17	8
1981 to 1984	7	4

It is very important to note that these reports of suspected associations between the vaccinations and deaths do not establish a casual relation ship between the two events.

Mr. T. J. Buckle

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why Mr. T. J. Buckle of 30 Coniston road, Worksop, who quit his job at Manton colliery last June is still being refused benefit and classed as a striking miner.

Mr Newton: A person who loses employment as a result of a stoppage of work due to a trade dispute at his place of empoyment is disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit unless he can show that he is not participating or directly interested in the dispute. Such disqualification continues for as long as the stoppage of work continues, unless he finds genuine work elsewhere in his normal occupation or becomes regularly engaged in some other occupation.

It is for the independent adjudicating authorities to decide whether the stoppage of work has ended in the light of the situation at each individual place of employment, and I understand that the adjudication officer has decided that the last day of the stoppage at Manton colliery was 30 March 1985. Benefit will therefore be payable from 1 April, subject to the usual three waiting days, to any ex-miners previously disqualified due to this stoppage.

National Health Service

Mrs. Renèe Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what research the statistics were based which are listed in the leaflets describing the developments the National Health Service has made under his administration which are to be sent to hospitals and health centres; and what consultations he had with statisticians in the National Health Service regions before compiling the information contained in them.

Mr. John Patten: The leaflet summarises information given in the "Health Service in England: Annual Report 1984" (HMSO) and is based on readily available data routine collected by the Department.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects to receive the report of the advisory committee on irradiated and stored foods;

(2) what process of public consultation is planned before any Government decision on whether or not food irradiation will be permitted in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: In the United Kingdom, regulations prohibit the production, importation and sale of irradiated foods for general human consumption. As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 1 April at column 496, the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods is currently preparing its report for Health and Agriculture Ministers on the safety and wholesomeness of irradiated foods. We expect to publish the report and to invite public comment. Should we thereafter consider that any changes in the regulations are desirable, we would put forward proposals which would be the subject of further consultation.

Mrs. Doris Woodland

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 1 April, Official Report column 497, regarding the payment by his Department of arrears due to Mrs. Doris Woodhead of West Charleton, near Kingsbridge, if he will arrange for Mrs. Woodhead also to be sent a breakdown of figures covering the period 1 July 1982 to 22 April 1984; and if he will also advise as to when the review decision about payments from 23 April 1984 will be made.

Mr. Whitney: The review decision regarding payments from 23 April 1984 was sent to Mrs. Woodhead on 12 April 1985. A breakdown of the amounts payable from 1 July 1982 to 22 April 1984 will be sent to Mrs. Woodhead as soon as possible.

Medical Aid for Poland Fund

Mr. Tony Lloyd: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much aid was given in 1984 to the Medical Aid for Poland Fund; and how much he expects to be given in 1985 and of what kind;

(2) how much surplus medical equipment and supplies were given to Equipment for Charity Hospitals Overseas in 1984; and how much he expects will be given in 1985.

Mr. John Patten: [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 97]: National Health Service authorities are responsible for deciding what equipment and supplies are surplus to their requirements and for their disposal in accordance with guidance issued by the Department in HN(76)2, a copy of which is in the Library. Information about such disposals is not generally provided to the Department.

I understand, however, that the Medical Aid for Poland Fund received aid in the form of a wide range of surplus NHS supplies in 1984. Details of quantities of the different items are not available but it is estimated that the 5,809 boxes of supplies provided amounted to 74·5 tonnes by weight.

I also understand that Equipment for Charity Hospitals Overseas (ECHO) received a wide range of surplus medical equipment and supplies in 1984, for some of which it made a nominal payment. Details of quantities of all the different items provided are not readily available, but it is estimated that some 110 van-loads, amounting to 193 tonnes by weight, were supplied. The following list gives examples of the kinds of items included and the quantities:

14,000 Syringes (old type markings)
400 Nurses dresses
15 Operating tables
5 Hydraulic dental chairs
12 Incubators
300 Tubular bed frames
6 Diathermy machines.

It is not possible to say how much surplus equipment and supplies will be provided to either organisation in 1985.

ENVIRONMENT

Cleethorpes Borough Council (Fun Park)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will order an immediate public local inquiry into the proposal by Cleethorpes borough council for a fun park on land owned by the council itself.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. Since the local planning authority has granted itself deemed planning permission, the planning application cannot now be called in by my right hon. Friend.

West Midlands Region

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the level of central Government grants allocated to local government finances in the west midlands region in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Macfarlane: The readily available information is given in the table. Further details, including housing subsidies and housing benefits, could be given only at disproportionate cost.

* The figures relate to the shire counties of Hereford and Worcester, Shropshire, Staffordshire and Warwickshire, the metropolitan county of West Midlands and to all the district councils covered by these counties.

† The rate support grant system changed in 1981-82. Figures for earlier years are not on a comparable basis. The figures for 1979-80 and 1980-81 include the needs, resources and domestic elements. Thereafter they include block grant and domestic rate relief grant.

‡ Figures up to 1981-82 are final entitlements. Those for 1982-83 and 1983-84 are entitlements based on outturn after holdback. Those for 1984-85 and 1985-86 are based on budgets after and before holdback respectively.

‖ The figures up to 1983-84 are final entitlements. Those for 1984-85 and 1985-86 are latest estimates.

¶ The figures up to 1984-85 cover all transport, while that for 1985-86 is for roads capital only.

• Figures are not available for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what target expenditure levels were set for the west midlands region's local authorities for each single year since 1982; and what proportion of their grants they lost in the form of penalties during the same period.

Mr. Macfarlane: This information is in the table. Expenditure guidance for 1981-82 related only to current expenditure as defined for rate support grant purposes, and is in November 1980 prices. Guidance for other years relates to total expenditure, and is in cash. The percentages take account of all disregards granted, and are based on block grant entitlements before holdback on the latest supplementary report for each year. Grant penalties have not so far been approved by the House and implemented for 1985-86.

Short-life Council Dwellings

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of short-life council dwellings licensed to housing associations.

Sir George Young: No such information is available.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, prior to reaching a decision on the future of Thamesmead in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, he will publish an assessment of the obligations, including financial obligations, that would be involved if the transfer were to be other than to the relevant local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am discussing with local representatives how a trust would function should ownership be transferred to it. Local views will be reflected in the formal consultation with residents later this year.

Redundant Farm Buildings

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to seek the introduction of measures to alter planning legislation to facilitate farmers finding alternative uses for redundant farm buildings.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department's planning circulars already urge local planning authorities to look carefully and sympathetically at proposals to re-use redundant farm buildings for small firms' activities. Planning permission should in general always be granted unless there are serious planning objections.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the continuation of the work of the Greater London council's tourist information centre in Shaftesbury avenue in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 2.22.1 of the "Yellow Book" — the Government's proposals for transferring functions to London Boroughs and metropolitan districts—dated July 1984.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1), pursuant to the answer of 16 November 1984, Official Report, column 378, how it is intended that information collected by the London boroughs on a consistent basis, and subject to the agreement of a two-thirds majority, would be made available to the public and to the boroughs as a whole; and where the information would be analysed, held or published, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 16 November 1984, Official Report, column 378, what method would be used to record whether a two-thirds majority of boroughs had agreed to collect a particular piece of information; and for how long each individual agreement would impose a duty on all boroughs to provide such information, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to clause 86 of the Local Government Bill. These are matters for the London borough councils to decide.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the cost savings in the administration of planning in London in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Macfarlane: I have nothing to add to the estimates in the answer my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 30 November 1984, at column 611.

Local Authority Services (Competition)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long he intends the period of consultation to be before he introduces legislation for competition in the provision of local authority services.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1985]: The formal period for responses to the proposals set out in the Government's consultation paper issued on 14 February ends on 30 April.

Subject to this consultation, it is proposed to prepare necessary legislation in time for the next parliamentary Session.

Local Authorities (Government Communications)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the circulars, (b) the circular letters, (c) the statutory instruments (standing orders) and (d) other communications sent to all authorities, or all authorities in a class, by his Department in England in each year for 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to his reply, 22 March 1985, c. 637]: Details of circular and circular letters issued by my Department to local authorities in the years 1981-82 to 1984-85 (up to 7 March 1985) are as follows. Details of statutory instruments made by my Department may be obtained from the Department's annual list of publications, and its monthly supplements, copies of which are available in the Library. No central record is maintained of other communications issued to local authorities.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Molesworth (Land Sales)

Mr. Frank Field asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, representing the Church Commissioners, if the Peterborough diocese has to report to, or gain the permission of, the Commissioners for the sale of land at Molesworth to the Ministry of Defence.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The land in question is diocesan glebe and the Commissioners' consent would be required under The Endowments and Glebe Measure 1976.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Northern Ireland (Criminal Cases)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Attorney-General in how many criminal cases in the Northern Ireland courts accomplices of accused have turned Queen's evidence; in how many such cases this evidence has been uncorroborated; and what has been the result of such cases.

The Attorney-General: As I said in the written answer which I gave to my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Spencer) on 24 October 1983, the law and practice in Northern Ireland, as in England and Wales, has always permitted the use of the evidence of accomplices in criminal trials: it is not something which has happened only in the context of the prosecution of terrorists or only in the situation which currently obtains in Northern Ireland. However, I take the present question to be directed at cases where such evidence has been used in recent years and specifically at trials for offences which are scheduled offences under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978. In respect, therefore, of trials on indictment for scheduled offences where evidence was given by an accomplice, the position for the years 1982 to date is as follows:

Year	No. Trials	Persons Acquitted	Persons Convicted or Pleading Guilty
1982	1	0	4
1983	4	13	55
1984	3	46	26

In 1984, the convictions of 14 of the persons tried in 1983 were quashed on appeal to the Court of Appeal.

There is no comprehensive record of, and it is not now feasible to identify without disproportionate cost, all the evidence which was before the court in relation to individual charges or whether such evidence was capable of constituting corroboration.

PRIME MINISTER

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Prime Minister if, further to her answer to the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) on 14 March, Official Report, column 432, football hooliganism is to be tackled by way of increased numbers of police and increased equipment, she will indicate by how many and where Her Majesty's Government intend to increase police numbers and what equipment is to be provided, to whom and at what cost.

The Prime Minister: I said no such thing. We have greatly strengthened the police service—on 28 February there were 9,286 more police officers in England and Wales than in May 1979—so that more officers are available for chief constables to deploy as required. Football hooliganism has to be tackled both by the football authorities and by the police and the courts. In his pursuant reply on 4 April at columns 756-57 to a question by the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett), my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport set out the substantial package of new measures which are being taken, following my meeting with the football authorities on 1 April. These measures include steps to extend the powers of the courts and the police and discussions with the police about improvements in their effectiveness in dealing with football violence. So far as equipment is concerned, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 4 April, at column 723.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Gould asked the Prime Minister if she discussed a new multi-fibre arrangement with any of the Governments with which she had discussions on her recent trip abroad; what views were expressed to her on this subject; and what indication she was able to give of Her Majesty's Government's attitude.

The Prime Minister: Yes; I said the multi-fibre arrangement is currently under review here, as, no doubt, in other countries.

Export Orders

Mr. Gould asked the Prime Minister if she will list those export orders which she discussed with foreign Governments on her recent trip abroad, and indicate those orders where the discussions she held have increased the chances of their being obtained by British firms.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 18 April at column 267.

Nurses and Widwives (Pay Review Body Report)

Mr. Dubs asked the Prime Minister when she received the report of the pay review body on nurses and midwives pay; and when she will make this public.

The Prime Minister: I am receiving this report today. It will be considered in the normal way.

Social Services Departments (Supplementary Employment Grant)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister what response she has made to the letter she has received from the Association of Directors of Social Services proposing that the Government pay social services departments a supplementary employment grant to give jobs to the unemployed involving simple caring tasks.

The Prime Minister: The proposals in the association's letter were given detailed and careful consideration and a reply was sent on my behalf on 3 April 1985 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security.

My hon. Friend referred the association to the White Paper "Employment: the Challenge for the Nation"—Cmnd. 9474—in which the Government's policy on job creation is clearly set out.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police (Recruitment)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the effect of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act upon recruitment to the Metropolitan police; and whether a juvenile conviction for petty vandalism is sufficient to bar entry into the force.

Mr. Giles Shaw: By virtue of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (Exceptions) Order 1975, the provisions of the 1974 Act do not apply to applications for appointment as a police constable. Applicants are not, therefore, entitled to withhold information about a previous conviction on the grounds that it is for other purposes spent under the Act. It is for the chief officer of police to decide whether, in any particular case, an isolated minor offence should be disregarded.

ARWEN 37 Weapon

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will obtain and place in the Library a copy of the report of the Metropolitan police officers who witnessed the recent manufacturer's demonstration of the ARWEN 37 weapon.

Mr. Giles Shaw: According to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, none of his officers has attended a manufacturer's demonstration of the ARWEN 37 since 1982. No formal report on that demonstration was submitted.

Metropolitan Police (Water Cannon)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions during the past 12 months any of the water cannon vehicles based by the Metropolitan police at the river way site in Greenwich have left the site to travel on the public highway; and what was the purpose of their journey on each such occasion.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that during the last 12 months the water cannon left the Greenwich site on two occasions for maintenance.

Metropolitan Police (Armoured Vehicles)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many armoured vehicles the Metropolitan police force has; what types of vehicles they are and how many there are of each type; and on what occasions during the past 12 months each type has been used.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the force has 15 armoured motor cars and that the majority are in regular use.

Metropolitan Police (Drugs Policy)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss the Metropolitan police force's policy towards cases involving the possession of cannabis.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Chief officers of police, including the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, are already well aware of my right hon. and learned Friend's views about drug misuse. They have available to them in exercising their responsibility in this matter the Attorney-General's guidelines on criteria for prosecution and my right hon. and learned Friend's advice to them on the appropriate use of cautioning. It is also open to them in any case of doubt or difficulty to seek the advice of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Metropolitan Police (Vehicles)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles specifically designated for the carrying of prisoners the Metropolitan police has at the current time; and how many they had in 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Ninety eight in 1979; 114 now.

Television (Background Noise)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will hold discussions with the chairmen of the British Broadcasting Corporation and Independent Broadcasting Authority about the problems caused to viewers, especially those hard of hearing, by background noise.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I know that the broadcasting authorities are aware of the problems that may be caused to viewers, particularly the hard of hearing, by background noise. If, however, the right hon. Member has particular instances in mind, I am sure that it would be useful if he were to notify the broadcasting authorities with a view to their bringing the matter to the attention of the producers concerned.

British Nationality

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to introduce legislation conferring on British nationals overseas rights and privileges under the British Nationality Act 1981 equivalent to those accorded to other categories of British nationality by that Act with regard to qualification for British citizenship.

Mr. Waddington: It is intended that a draft of an Order in Council to implement the nationality provisions of the Hong Kong Act 1985 should be put before Parliament with a view to the order itself being made by April 1986. Among other things, the draft order will include provision for British nationals (overseas) to be entitled to be registered as British citizens under section 4 of the British Nationality Act 1981 on the same terms as British dependent territories citizens and other British nationals.

Mr. Alhaji Umaru Dikko

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the current leave to remain in the United Kingdom given to Alhaji Umaru Dikko expires.

Mr. Waddington: On 20 June 1984, Mr. Dikko was granted leave to enter the United Kingdom as a visitor for a period of six months. Before the expiry of that period, Mr. Dikko applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. This application has the effect of extending his leave to remain while his application is under consideration.

Peacock Inquiry

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he can yet give further details on the Peacock inquiry into broadcasting finance; and to whom members of the public should address any comments which they wish to make.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The terms of reference of the Peacock committee were circulated in the Official Report following my right hon. and learned Friend's statement of 27 March about the BBC's licence fee at column 479. We hope to be able to announce the names of the members of the committee before long. The committee will doubtless indicate, as soon as it begins its task, how it wishes evidence to be submitted to it.

RAF Molesworth

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of the policing operation at RAF Molesworth over the Easter weekend; and if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cambridgeshire police about the number of people arrested for alleged criminal damage and other offences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Cambridgeshire informs me that 107 people were arrested at the site for alleged offences including criminal damage, trespass on military land, assault on the police and destruction. He is not yet in a position to give a complete estimate of the costs of policing the demonstration.

Royal Air Force Bases (Demonstrations)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has had any discussions with chief constables about the degree of retaliation by police to peaceful demonstrations at Royal Air Force bases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Chief constables are well aware that police officers must not use force unless it is absolutely necessary to do so.

Channel Islands (Drugs Money)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the information given to the Under-Secretary on his visit to the United States of America regarding the use of the Channel Islands to deposit in secret money from illegal drugs activities.

Mr. Mellor: It would not be appropriate to publish details of the specific case which was mentioned to me.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to counter the use of the Channel Islands for the deposit of money from illegal drugs activities.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend will continue to encourage the Channel Islands to follow their present policies of enacting parallel legislation to the United Kingdom, and of adopting similar standards and practices to avoid abuse of banking facilities. He will keep a close watch on any indications of money from illegal drug activities being channelled through the islands, and these will be brought to the attention of the island authorities as a matter of urgency.

Metropolitan Police (Medals)

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why it takes 12 months for the Metropolitan police to notify and present the recipient with a medal for long service and conduct.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there is no unnecessary delay between an officer becoming eligible for the police long service and good conduct medal and the award of the medal. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, he may wish to take it up with the Commissioner.

Crimes Against Children

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will call for reports from each chief constable as to the number of children who were: (a) murdered and (b) abducted and (c) sexually assaulted in 1984 and to date in 1985; how these figures compare with the previous five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 15 April, c. 14]: The Government view such crimes against children with the utmost concern. Chief officers fully share this view and respond to these offences accordingly. Much relevant information is already reported regularly and my right hon. and learned Friend sees no need to call for special reports at this stage. The age and sex of victims of homicide is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—table 4.6 of the latest issue for 1983, Cmnd. 9349; corresponding statistics for 1984 will become available later this year. The number of recorded offences of child stealing—which includes offences under the Child Abduction Act 1984, kidnapping, abduction of persons of all ages and of all sexual offences including some specifically involving juveniles — is published annually in chapter 2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". The latest figures for 1984 were published in "Home Office Statistical Bulletin" issue 6/85, on 12 March 1985. The numbers of persons found guilty or cautioned up to 1983 for certain offences in which the victim was, or may have been, a juvenile are given in table 1; corresponding figuresa for 1984 will become available later this year. Some information about the number of young people recorded as missing each year is available from the missing persons bureau of the Metropolitan Police and is given in table 2; these figures are not a comprehensive record of persons missing and traced, particularly those from outside the Metropolitan police district, because not all such cases are reported.

ENERGY

Advisory Committee on Research and Development

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the members of the Advisory Committee on Research and Development together with details of those members with close involvement in any renewable energy source, nuclear power, fossil fuel energy and energy conservation industry.

Mr. David Hunt: I have nothing to add to my reply to my hon. Friend on 25 February at columns 15-16.

Coal Industry (European Community Proposals)

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of all the proposals emanating from the European Economic Community to which Her Majesty's Government is a party which relate to the reduction of coal output in Britain and the degree of progress made towards meeting the targets set by the Commission, in terms of number of pits, manpower and output.

Mr. Peter Walker: No such proposals have been received.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those on youth training schemes in Knowsley have gone on to full-time employment in each year since its inception.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is not available. Regular information on the destinations of a sample of young people leaving the youth training scheme in each of the Manpower Services Commission's areas should be available by the end of May 1985.

Employment Protection

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now seek to extend the provisions of the Employment Protection Acts 1975 and 1978 to all workers irrespective of the number of hours worked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Government consider it right that an employee should have to work for an employer for a minimum number of hours each week before acquiring some of the statutory rights enforceable against that employer.

Pregnancy Leave

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will now introduce legislation providing women workers with at least six months' pregnancy leave on full pay, with jobs guaranteed and with no loss of employment rights or entitlement to holiday pay and pensions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will now consider extending the existing statutory maternity leave to include at least three months' paid maternity leave; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government have been considering the question of financial provision for maternity as part of the social security review. We will announce the outcome of the review shortly. As regards other rights during maternity absence, the statutory provisions are constantly under review, but we have no immediate plans to amend them.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage of women in the total work force employed part-time in 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: In December 1984, 46·4 per cent. of female employees in employment in Great Britain worked part-time. The corresponding figures for December 1981, December 1982 and December 1983 were 42·6 per cent., 43·7 per cent, and 45·3 per cent. respectively.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now introduce legislation providing a national minimum wage of £100 per week for all workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. A national minimum wage would raise employers' costs and threaten jobs, including the jobs of those it was designed to help.

Community Programme (Merseyside)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many full-time community programme placements are available on Merseyside;

(2) how many part-time community programme places are currently available on Merseyside.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At 29 March, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 6,488 filled places on Merseyside. It is for sponsors to determine the balance between full and part-time jobs within available resources, but at that date 2,278 places were full-time and 4,210 were part-time.

Health and Safety Commission

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of staff who have been employed by the Health and Safety Commission in each year since 1979; and if he will consider giving them further assistance to enable a greater number of staff to visit factories more regularly.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The numbers of permanent staff employed by the Health and Safety Executive at 1st April each year were:

	Number
1979	4,168
1980	4,110
1981	3,884
1982	3,712
1983	3,593
1984	3,563
1985	3,616

Decisions on the deployment of staff to particular areas of work are a matter for the Executive.

Young Deaf People

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to identify and evaluate the special employment problems of young deaf people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no specific arrangements for identifying and evaluating the employment problems of young deaf people specifically. All disabled people, including those who are young and those who are deaf, are able to benefit from the Manpower Services Commission's general employment services and its specialist schemes and services for disabled people, according to their individual needs.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what special training facilities are provided for young deaf people to improve their employment prospects.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Manpower Services Commission, which has responsibility for training matters, does not offer national training provision aimed specifically at young deaf people. The Commission's policy is to encourage these young people to integrate with their able-bodied counterparts on locally provided schemes which can be adapted to meet individual needs.

Credit Card Companies

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has regarding the number of persons employed in consequence of the business activities of credit card companies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department's employment estimates are analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification which does not distinguish the business activities of credit card companies.

Underpaid Workers

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers covered by wages councils were underpaid in Lothian, Edinburgh and Leith, respectively, during 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Statistics are not collected for geographical areas smaller than Wages Inspectorate divisions.

Employees' Pay (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish (a) a table showing the proportion of full-time employees in the Greater Manchester area who, in the New Earnings Survey 1984, are paid less than £50, £60, £70, £80, £90 and £100 when overtime earnings are included and (b) a table showing the proportion of full-time employees in the same area who are paid less than £100 when overtime earnings are excluded, for all males and females and sub-divided into manual and non-manual males and females.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information relates to full-time adult employees working a full week and is set out below:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Post Paid Envelopes

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal how many official House of Commons post paid envelopes are estimated to be sent out in the post on any one sitting day.

Mr. Biffen: Correspondence in House of Commons post paid envelopes is sent by Members and their staffs through post offices throughout the United Kingdom. These envelopes are not separately identified. I am advised, however, than an average of 7,500 items are posted daily from the House of Commons on sitting days, virtually all of which are House of Commons post paid envelopes.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal exactly how much money was paid out in 1984 to the Post Office for the provision of post paid envelopes; and how this compares with each of the past five years.

Mr. Biffen: The total cost to the House of Commons Vote—Class XIII A, Vote 1—for post paid stationery in the year 1984 was £376,748·81. The cost in the previous five years was as follows:

1983	351,385·36
1982	359,124·22
1981	296,229·76
1980	188,370·68
1979	81,418·53

Note: The steep rise in charges for paid stationery during 1980, by comparison with 1979, is due to a combination of rising prices and an increase in demand.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will consider providing second class post paid House of Commons stationery to complement existing stationery; and whether he is able to estimate the likely savings.

Mr. Biffen: No. I refer my hon. Friend to the First Report from the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services), Session 1982-83.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what information he has showing the amount of House of Commons post paid mail that actually arrived the next day; what percentage is involved; how much arrived on a later day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: No figures are available for mail posted from the House of Commons since this goes into the ordinary postal system and is not specially checked at the point of delivery.

Sorting Office

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will estimate the number of letters received at the House of Commons sorting office on any one sitting day.

Mr. Biffen: I am advised that an average of 14,500 letters are received daily at the House of Commons sorting office on sitting days.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal how much mail is estimated to have been handled by the House of Commons sorting office in 1984.

Mr. Biffen: The Post Office do not keep records of the total amount of mail passing through the House of Commons sorting office, but it is estimated that approximately 6·5 million items were handled in 1984.

Telephones

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal how much was the Palace of Westminster's telephone bill in 1984; how the figure compares with each of the past five years; and if he is able to divide the figures between the House of Lords and the House of Commons.

Mr. Biffen: The telephone bill for the Palace of Westminster for 1984 was £1,303,455·22. In the preceding four years it was as follows:

1983	1,111,299·33
1982	1,174,629·35
1981	1,334,288·49
1980	1,164,373·89

These charges are divided into proportions which are reviewed annually. The present percentages are as follows:

	Percentage
House of Lords	9·8
House of Commons	86·1
Lord Chancellor's Department	1·8
Department of the Environment	2·2
Post Office	0·1

Sitting Times

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what was (i) the average time of rising, Fridays excepted, and (ii) the latest time of rising, in each of the past 10 Sessions and the current Session to date.

Mr. Biffen: The information is as follows:

Session	Average time of rising (Fridays excepted)	Latest time of rising on next day
1974-75	12.43 am	4.56 pm
1975-76	12.35 am	1.41 pm
1976-77	12.31 am	9.33 pm
1977-78	12.05 am	12.58 pm
1978-79	11.32 pm	11.00 am
1979-80	12.21 am	2.51 pm
1980-81	12.35 am	3.30 pm
1981-82	12.13 am	9.27 am
1982-83	11.52 pm	9.21 am
1983-84	12.26 am	10.43 pm

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Imports

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for standard industrial classification headings 3434, 3443, 3452, 3453, 3454, 3634, 373, 4115, 4116, 415, and 418, the ratio of imports to home demand in 1975 and at the latest available date for the EC and the non-EC countries together with the relevant import figures.

Mr. Channon: The information is given in the table below:

Investment

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report, a table showing the level of United Kingdom investment overseas in each year since 1980 and at the latest available date together with the net investment during the year; and if he will provide any revision for earlier years since his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) of 29 July 1983, Official Report, columns 742-46.

Mr. Channon: The level of United Kingdom investment overseas since 1980 is given table 11.1—United Kingdom External Assets—of "United Kingdom balance of payments, 1984 edition"—The CSO pink book. Flows of United Kingdom direct overseas investment are given in table 8.2, inward and outward investment, of the same publication.

The following table provides such revisions that are available to the information supplied to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 29 July 1983 and published in columns 742-46 of the Official Report.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing imports and exports to the European Economic Community and the rest of the world in 1984 of items covered by division 66 less section 667 of the standard industrial trade classification.

Mr. Channon: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, data on imports by country under heading SITC 667 for these years are not published. The available data, together with figures for the broader heading SITC 66, are in the table.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing imports from and exports to the European Economic Community in 1970 and 1984 of total trade in manufactures less erratics.

Matthew Brown plc

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the proposed takeover of Matthew Brown plc by Scottish and Newcastle Breweries.

Mr. Butcher: My hon. Friend will announce his decision as soon as practicable.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the proposed takeover of Matthew Brown plc by Scottish and Newcastle Breweries.

Mr. Butcher: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Exfinco

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with major shareholders of a new company named Exfinco; and what relationship this new company will have with the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Channon: Officials of the Export Credits Guarantee Department are aware of the setting up of this company, which will be entitled to insure export business with the Department subject to the same criteria as apply to other companies. It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to make public details of ECGD's relationships with individual exporters.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will institute a departmental investigation into allegations that the Export Credits Guarantee Department has been the victim of substantial fraud; what is the scale of the frauds alleged; what steps he has taken to secure police investigation of these allegations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Several months ago the Export Credits Guarantee Department asked the City of London police to investigate a number of transactions where apparent irregularities had come to light. Inquiries are in progress and I hope that they will be brought to a swift conclusion. The ECGD is co-operating fully with the police, and will continue to do so on the cases in question and any others which might arise. Action of a legal or other nature must depend on the outcome of the inquiries.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any ivory has been imported into the United Kingdom during the past 12 months.

Mr. Channon: Between March 1984 and February 1985, the United Kingdom imported worked ivory to the value of £463,000 cif. Other imports of ivory are not separately distinguished in the United Kingdom overseas trade statistics.

Turtle Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any turtle products have been imported into the United Kingdom during the past 12 months.

Mr. Channon: Import permits have been granted for turtle products in accordance with European Council regulation No. 3626/82 which implements the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora within the European Community. However, information on the take-up of these permits for the last 12 months is not yet available.

BSC (Tinsley Park)

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates have been made of the cost (a) to the British Steel Corporation and (b) to the Government of the proposed closure of the Tinsley Park melting shop and billet mill.

Mr. Butcher: The estimated costs are a commercial matter for the British Steel Corporation. They can be met from within the corporation's existing external financing limit.

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether the Phoenix II proposals jointly submitted by the British Steel Corporation and G.K.N. in December 1983, included the closure of the Tinsley Park melting shop and billet mill;

(2) by what percentage the estimated excess capacity of the plants included in the Phoenix II proposals would be reduced by the closure of the Tinsley Park melting shop and billet mill.

Mr. Butcher: The Phoenix II proposals are still under consideration. The details of the plants concerned and any proposed changes in capacity must remain commercially confidential to BSC and GKN, but I can say that the intended closure of Tinsley Park as announced by BSC would be consistent with the Phoenix II proposals.

Whale Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any whale products have been imported into the United Kingdom during the past 12 months.

Mr. Channon: Import permits have been granted for whale products in accordance with European Council Regulation No. 3626/82 which implements the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora within the European Community. However, information on the take-up of these permits for the last 12 months is not yet available.

Films (Manchester)

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date it is proposed to begin the experiment on the limit to delays in the release of popular films to cinemas in Manchester.

Mr. Fletcher: The Director General of Fair Trading will shortly be seeking undertakings from the industry with a view to the experiment coming into force on 31 May.

British Telecom (Shares)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the British Telecom shares reserved for British Telecom employees and pensioners was subscribed for; what proportion was allocated; and what happened to any balance.

Mr. Butcher: Up to 10 per cent. of the shares being offered in the British Telecom flotation were available for BT employees and pensioners. Applications were received from employees and pensioners for 5·1 per cent. of the offered shares and 4·5 per cent. of the offered shares were allotted. Shares not allotted under these arrangements became available to meet applications from members of the public.

Industry and Wealth Creation (Education)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has taken any steps to improve the understanding of industry and wealth creation by primary school age children.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. This week sees the launch of a national competition organised by the School Curriculum Industry Project — SCIP — and sponsored by my Department for all schools in England and Wales with children under the age of 11. The aim of the competition will be to encourage teachers to develop children's understanding and appreciation of the contribution which industry makes to our society. The winners will be the schools with the best project for involving local industry.

A number of primary schools are already active in this area through a variety of means, such as using simulations, mini enterprises, visits to work places and visits by people in industry to the school. A free book "Schools and Industry 5-13" giving examples of what can be done and how to go about it, will be given to each school interested in taking part. All primary schools in the United Kingdom will shortly be receiving letters about this competition from the organisers.

Packaging

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last had contact with the packaging industry and the Committee for Packaging and the Environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

My last contact with the packaging industry was on 2 November 1983 when I met INCPEN — the Industry Committee for Packaging and the Environment — with which officials maintain regular contact.

ENVIRONMENT

Badgers

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of badgers; and where they are located.

Mr. Waldegrave: Accurate figures are not available, but the Nature Conservancy Council calculates that the badger population of Great Britain is in the region of 400,000. Badgers are not common in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, on the higher mountains in Snowdonia or Brecon, in East Anglia, or in large built-up areas. They are widespread in other areas of Great Britain and are most common on the chalk hills of the south of England such as the Cotswolds and the north and south Downs.

Houses (Right-to-Buy Scheme)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications he has received from local authorities to except elderly persons' dwellings from the right-to-buy scheme under schedule 1 of the Housing Act 1980 as amended by the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 since the coming into effect of the 1984 Act; and in how many of these cases he has declined to make the determination applied for by the council.

Mr. Gow: Since the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 came into operation on 26 August 1984, the Secretary of State has received 297 applications from local authorities under paragraph 5 of schedule 1 to the Housing Act 1980, as amended. Of these, 13 applications were out of time, 45 were subsequently withdrawn and 200 are under consideration. Thirty nine cases have been decided. In seven, he has made a determination to exclude the dwelling from the right to buy, while in the remaining 32 he has declined to make a determination.

Palace of Westminster (Cleaning)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 15 April, which are the specific areas of the Palace of Westminster which are cleaned by the Exclusive Cleaning and Maintenance Company rather than by staff of either House or the Property Services Agency; what was the rationalisation of the work which caused the extension of the company's contract to October 1982; if he will list the companies which tendered for the current contract; and whether the Exclusive Cleaning and Maintenance Company submitted the lowest tender.

Sir George Young: The specific areas of the Palace which are cleaned by the company are set out in very lengthy schedules, copies of which I will send to the hon. Member. There were two elements of rationalisation of work that took place in 1982. First, the number of commercial cleaning companies working in the Palace was reduced to one. Second, the areas to be cleaned by the various bodies were defined more clearly and conveniently, removing many illogicalities which had grown up over the years. The following companies tendered for the contract, and Exclusive Cleaning and Maintenance (London) Company Ltd. submitted the lowest tender:

Exclusive Cleaning and Maintenance (London) Ltd.
Initial Service Cleaners Ltd.
Pall Mall Window and Office Cleaning Ltd.
Professional Maintenance (UK) Ltd.
RCO Contract Services Ltd.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why part of the Palace of Westminster is not cleaned either by staff of the two Houses or by the Property Services Agency.

Sir George Young: The Property Services Agency provides a service common to both Houses. For many years, much of this service has been carried out commercially, and the commercial element has increased as the agency's directly employed staff has declined. The present arrangements are the result of a detailed review, in conjunction with the authorities of both Houses, in 1981.

Private Rented Accommodation

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report full details of measures taken by the Government since 1979 to encourage a supply of a greater availability of accommodation to rent in the private sector.

Sir George Young: We took a range of measures in the Housing Act 1980:

(i) the introduction of shorthold tenancies, under which landlords are able to let for a fixed term of between one and five years with a certainty of regaining possession if they so wish;
(ii) the introduction of the assured tenancy scheme, which permits bodies approved by the Secretary of State to let property at freely negotiated rents outside the provisions of the Rent Acts;
(iii) changes to the rules for lettings by absent owner-occupiers and resident landlords, including the provision of quicker and easier possession procedures;
(iv) a reduction in the period before which a fair rent can normally be reviewed from three years to two, with a corresponding change to the phasing period, thus helping to improve the value of fair rents;
(v) simplified procedures for the registration of fair rents;
(vi) the abolition of controlled tenancies;
(vii) strengthening of the provisions covering the payments of rent arrears when possession is granted by the court.

Litter

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received asking for the implementation of section 4 of the Litter Act 1983.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have had six representations asking for the implementation of this section which requires local authorities to prepare litter abatement plans. Implementation has so far been deferred in view of the need for restraint in public expenditure.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 28 March 1985, Official Report, column 338, what information is available on the type of litter deposited by the public.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following information was obtained from surveys of picnic sites on August bank holidays in 1972 and 1977 arranged by the Glass Manufacturers' Federation (GMF):

Type of litter	Percentage of total litter
	1972	1977
Drink containers	7	7

* =Negligible.

The results of a survey undertaken in 1983 will be published shortly by GMF.

Other information is available locally where local authorities have undertaken surveys in their areas.

Keep Britain Tidy Group

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the Keep Britain Tidy Group makes effective use of the public funds allocated to it.

Mr. Waldegrave: Departmental officials serve on the group's executive and finance committees and have regular contact with officers of the group and are thus in close touch with the group's activities and the way in which the grant is used.

In 1982, the Department commissioned a value for money review of the group's activities. The review team concluded that the group gave value for money in promoting the prevention and control of litter. The group's community environment programme, which it implements with the co-operation of local authorities, includes photomeasurement techniques to measure the effectiveness of the programme in litter abatement locally.

Local officers of the Manpower Services Commission inspect individual projects involving staff employed by the group under the MSC's community programme.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of public funds given in each of the last five years to the Keep Britain Tidy Group.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Keep Britain Tidy Group receive money from this Department by way of a grant under the Litter Act 1983, from the Manpower Services Commission for services and staff under the community programme, from local authorities in return for the provision of services in connection with litter abatement, and from nationalised industries by way of contribution. The respective total amounts in each of the last five years are as follows:

Year	Amount £
1980	349,780
1981	904,790
1982	1,483,470

Ministry of Agriculture Buffer Store (Drury)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Property Services Agency is to convey the former Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food buffer store, Drury, Buckley, Clwyd to the district authority of Alyn and Deeside for the purposes of industrial and environmental development; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The property is surplus to Government requirement and the Property Services Agency has begun the usual sale processes including the submission of a planning application. The agency is aware that the council is an interested purchaser and a decision will be made about a possible sale to it as soon as all the relevant factors have been assessed.

Parliament House, Edinburgh

Mr. Fairbairn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of replacing the Scotch flagstones in the corridors of Parliament House, Edinburgh, with English slabs presently being undertaken.

Sir George Young: The estimated cost of the present essential repairs to the floors in the corridors of Parliament House, Edinburgh, using flagstones approved by the local planning authority and the historic building branch of the Scottish Development Department, is £68,615 inclusive of VAT.

Local Authorities (EC Funding)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how successful applications for projects submitted by either the Greater London council or a metropolitan county council that have obtained funding commitments for three years from the European Economic Community will be dealt with if the councils are abolished.

Mr. Waldegrave: The principal sources of European Community funding which are involved are the European social fund—ESF—and the regional development fund —ERDF. The ESF grants will continue to be paid on approved schemes during the lifetime of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils.

The ERDF grants are generally for capital infrastructure works and related payment claims may continue for several years. The grant allocations and associated responsibilities will pass to the successor bodies.

National Home Improvement Council

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the National Home Improvement Council to discuss the level of resources for local authorities for improving their stocks of old houses.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet representatives of the National Home Improvement Council to discuss the level of resources available to local authorities for improving their own housing stock.

Migrating Birds (Slaughter)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations Her Majesty's Government intend to make to the French Government about the slaughter of migrating birds crossing France on their way to Britain;

(2) what representations Her Majesty's Government intend to make to the Greek Government about the hunting and slaughter of migrating turtle doves, cuckoos and other migrating birds crossing Greece en route to the United Kingdom;

(3) what representations Her Majesty's Government intend to make to the Italian Government about the annual slaughter of honey buzzards, harriers, kestrels and eagles crossing Italy en route to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under the terms of the EC birds directive, special protection is given to all migratory birds in member states, subject to certain exceptions. Should good evidence of contraventions of this directive be provided then we would, as we have in the past, draw them to the attention of the European Commission in the strongest terms. It is the Commission's responsibility to ensure that the national implementation of measures by member states complies with the directive. But we have, of course, no power to interfere in another country's internal affairs.

Large Panel Construction Systems

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive from the Building Research Establishments the results of the study of large panel systems of construction including panelled houses.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on this subject on 15 April, at column 115.

Salmon Fisheries (Conservation)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences have been (a) applied for and (b) issued in England and Wales under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the shooting of goosanders and mergansers to prevent serious damage to salmon fisheries.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his answer, 18 April 1985, c. 262]: Since the Wildlife and Countryside Act came into force, two applications, both concerning goosanders, have been received; both applications were made by the same person, concern the same site in the Towy valley in Wales, and were stated to be for the protection of salmon, sewin and trout. The first application was withdrawn after the birds moved from the site. The second is currently under consideration.

WALES

A55 Bangor

12. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimated date for the completion of the dualling of the A55 road to Bangor.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The provisional programme envisages the substantial completion of upgrading of the A55 trunk road between Chester and Bangor around the turn of the decade; subject to satisfactory progress with statutory procedures and engineering design, and the availability of resources.

Private Schools

13. Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales by how much cash he has assisted the private schools sector since 1982; and by how much he proposes to assist this sector for the current financial year.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: There is nothing that I can usefully add to the answer that my right hon. Friend gave the hon. Gentleman on 4 April 1985.

Job Creation

14. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce unemployment in the Cynon Valley.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Government's economic strategy is designed to attack the underlying causes of unemployment in the economy as a whole and therefore in the Cynon Valley.

Afforestation

15. Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy regarding the granting or refusal of applications for afforestation near inland waters in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Applications for grant in aid for afforestation are made to the Forestry Commission which treats each case on its merits. In considering an application, the Commission consults as appropriate with the Agriculture Department, the local planning authority and other statutory authorities to ensure that the requirements of land use, agriculture, amenity recreation and nature conservation are taken into account before a decision is reached. Since mid-1984, consultation has taken place with the Welsh water authority on all applications falling in areas in which the authority has expressed interest.

Labour Statistics

16. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of unemployed in Rhondda, Mid-Glamorgan and Wales at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr Nicholas Edwards: On 14 March 1985 the number of claimants unemployed were 5,522, 35,316 and 180,559 respectively.

17. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of unemployed males and females in Wales at the latest date for which figures are available; what percentage increase these figures represent on those for May 1979; and if he will include details of young unemployed and long-term unemployed.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: On 14 March 1985, there were 128,721 unemployed male claimants and 51,838 unemployed female claimants in Wales, an increase of 130·9 per cent. and 142·0 per cent respectively on the estimated equivalent figures for May 1979. In January 1985, 75,109 claimants were aged under 25 years and 74,799 claimants had been unemployed for over a year.

18. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present level of unemployment in Wrexham at the latest available date; and how this compares with the figure in May 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: On 14 March 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the Wrexham travel-to-work area was 8,184. Comparable figures for May 1979 are not available because of changes to travel-to-work area boundaries and the move to claimant-based figures.

Education Expenditure

19. Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage expenditure after allowing for pay and prices, per child in education in Clwyd between 1978 and the latest available year.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Between 1978-79 and 1983-84 Clwyd's expenditure in constant terms per pupil in primary and secondary schools increased by 20 per cent.

Health Service Expenditure

20. Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales by how much Health Service spending in Wales has risen, in real terms since 1979; and what are the comparable figures for 1974 to 1979; and how many community hospitals have been opened in Wales since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Between 1979-80 and 1984-85 total expenditure on the NHS in Wales rose by 12·5 per cent. after taking account of changes in pay and prices. The increase between 1974-75 and 1979-80 was 8·4 per cent. The Mold community hospital opened in April 1984 and four other hospitals in Clwyd have been redeveloped and re-designated as community hospitals. One other community hospital is being built in Powys.

Housing

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many grants of all kinds for the repair and improvement of houses, bungalows and flats have been made (a) in Wales and (b) in the area of the Vale of Glamorgan, respectively, during each of the past 10 years; and what is his latest information regarding work of this kind still in progress.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The available information is given below. Details of grants paid for the years 1975-77 are not held at district level.

No information is available on the number of grants which have already been approved, but on which final payments have not been made.

Residential Homes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the operation in Wales of the Residential Homes Act 1980.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Residential Homes Act 1980 was repealed and effectively superseded by the Registered Homes Act 1984, which came into force on 1 January 1985. It strengthens the regulations governing the registration, operation and inspection of all voluntary and private residential care homes catering for four or more elderly or otherwise dependent people. Although it is too soon to draw conclusions on the effectiveness of the 1984 Act in operation. The Government believe that private and voluntary residential care homes will have an increasingly valuable role to play in the development of care in the community to complement the provision made by the health and local authorities. Registration and inspection of homes remain the responsibility of local authorities.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Heart Transplants

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what his plans are for the future of heart transplantations.

Mr. Fowler: I am today publishing the report of a study commissioned by my Department into the costs and benefits of heart transplantation. The study, undertaken by the Department of Economics at Brunel university and the department of community medicine at the University of Cambridge, shows that the costs of carrying out heart transplants have fallen and that benefits, in terms of life expectancy and quality of life, have improved over the last four years.

The report, copies of which have been placed in the Library, has been considered by my Standing Medical Advisory Committee, the Transplant Advisory Panel and the British Cardiac Society. They have all suggested that a gradual expansion of heart transplantation within the National Health Service would now be justified. That is an important conclusion and one which will require careful consideration.

Up to the present, heart transplantation programmes have been supported by special central allocations to the two units concerned. In the current year, £1,600,000 has been allocated to Papworth and Harefield hospitals. That will enable them to carry out a reasonable programme of work. It represents the limit of resources which can be provided this year and, in common with all other services, the units will have to operate within the resources available.

If heart transplantation is now to be considered as appropriate for treatment on a service development basis rather than as part of an experimental programme, it will be necessary to consider how its claims should be dealt with in relation to other competing priorities within the NHS. It is the function of the Supra Regional Services Advisory Group to advise on such issues. I am therefore asking the committee to look into the situation and to make recommendations to Ministers. This group is made up of doctors and laymen who have experience of the range of work of health authorities and advise Ministers on the financial allocations to a few highly specialised services which need central Government funding in a few designated national centres. They will need to take account both of the needs of other services within the NHS and of the extent to which any additions to the heart transplant service would be dependent upon the availability of suitably trained and experienced staff. I shall await their recommendations before reaching conclusions on the extent and nature of any expansion in the service.

"Review of Social Services"

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) from whom he will be seeking views after he publishes his review of social services;

(2) what will be the consultation period for those who wish to make comments on the forthcoming review of social services;

(3) what consultations he is having, following the publication of his consultation paper, "Review of Social Services", about the impact of demographic changes in the demands for social services;

(4) what consultations he is having, following the publication of his consultation paper, "Review of Social Services", about reducing or revoking any of the statutory duties currently imposed on social services departments;

(5) what consultations he is having, following the publication of his consultation paper, "Review of Social Services", to consider ways of cutting spending in social services departments.

Mr. John Patten: The hon. Member's inquiries are premature. Decisions about consultations will be made when the review is completed.

Warnock Report

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which political parties submitted views on the Warnock report during the consultative period; and what attitude was taken by each party submitting views to the proposals about experiments on human embryos.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The only party to submit views was the Ecology party, which opposed the report's recommendations about research on human embryos.

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library, within the next seven days, the papers submitted to and considered by the Warnock committee.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am arranging for this to be done as soon as possible, where the organisation concerned is willing for its evidence to be made public. The clerical work involved is very substantial and my hon. Friend's request for all the papers within seven days may prove unrealistic.

Benefits

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average state benefit payment for a married couple with two children aged under 11 years.

Mr. Whitney: The 1983 "Family Expenditure Survey" indicates that on average married couples with two children aged under 11 years received £19 weekly in social security benefits.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update to November 1984 at assumed November 1984 prices, the information on the value of benefits and allowances provided in the reply of 23 December 1982, Official Report, column 690, to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley).

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

Notes to tables:

* Based on the movement in the General Index of Retail Prices.

1. Tax allowances available to all earners in 1955 comprised three elements; the personal allowance, national insurance relief and earned income relief, and all are included. Earned income relief is that for average earnings.
2. In respect of average earnings of £10·87. Estimates of average earnings have been obtained by interpolation between October estimates, using the seasonally adjusted monthly index of average earnings (older series) published by the Department of Employment.
3. Includes dependency allowance for children.
4. Rates as at May 1955 when Sickness Benefit was increased. Real value at November 1984 (Col (b) of table) calculated from May 1955 base.
5. Child tax allowance for the family illustrated would have been £200 per annum in 1955. It has been assumed that the family's income subject to tax is more than £200 below the top of the standard rate tax band.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update to November 1984 the information provided in the reply of 8 November 1982 to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) Official Report, columns 51-2, relating to child support.

Notes:

* Does not show the effect of child tax allowances to the standard rate taxpayer. In year prior to April 1979 some recipients of unemployment benefit would also have derived advantage from child tax allowance because of their receipt of earnings in the course of the tax year.

† Based on the movement in the general index of retail prices at November 1984, the latest date available.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he can give the latest estimate of the number of recipients of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) standard housing benefit and (c) family income supplement in the Greater Manchester county council area, or the nearest region available; and what is the total adult population in the regions chosen giving comparable information for 1979.

Mr. Whitney: The Greater Manchester county council area is served by 23 of the Department's local offices. Their boundaries are conterminous with the Greater Manchester county council. The number of recipients of supplementary benefit from these offices were 186,029 in February 1979 and 302,300 in February 1985.

Information is not available in the precise form requested for standard housing benefit. Estimates of the numbers of recipients of rent rebates, rent allowances and rates rebates in the Greater Manchester county council area for the financial years 1979-80 and 1984-85 are:

	1979-80	1984-85
Rent rebate	*60,000	*90,000
Rent allowance	*10,000	*20,000
Rates rebate	*160,000	*200,000

* Figures rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Figures for recipients of Family Income Supplement are available only on a regional basis. In 1983 regional boundaries were re-drawn. Figures for 1979 and 1985 are not therefore comparable since the new north western region is much larger than the old north-west (Manchester) region. Figures available — rounded to the nearest thousand — are 5,000 in January 1979 and 35,000 in January 1985.

Figures of adult population are available only for the Greater Manchester metropolitan county area for June 1979 and June 1983 — the latest available. They are 2,016,400 in June 1979 and 2,027,600 in June 1983.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of those entitled to social security benefits in the United Kingdom have opted to have their benefits paid by advance credit transfer rather than by giro at their local post office; what percentage have opted for advance credit transfer; and how this compares with the Department's projected estimate of cost savings from his programme.

Mr. Whitney: Some 1 million beneficiaries in Great Britain have opted to receive payment by automated credit transfer and this represents about 7 per cent. of those currently receiving benefits for which the option is available. The exercises to invite beneficiaries to change their method of payment are not yet complete, but it is clear that the take-up of payment by automated credit transfer is lower than envisaged.

Students

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations have been held by his Department since the announcement of the Social Security Review on the position of students in (a) advanced education and (b) non-advanced further education.

Mr. Whitney: There was considerable consultation following the announcement of the review of social security last year when members of the public and interested bodies were invited to submit their views, both orally and in writing, on matters relating to social security. These included the position of students as they related to the benefits system.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many lasers currently available for the treatment of cervical cancer were purchased with public funds.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold this detailed local information centrally.

Research

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services of the money allocated for research by his Department, what proportion and how much was spent on deafness problems in the last year for which figures are available; how much was spent on (a) sensory and (b) sight; and if he will list the research projects concerned with deafness supported by his Department.

Mr. Newton: In the financial year 1983-84, the latest for which exact expenditure figures are available, the total DHSS research Vote was £19,361,000. Of this, some £64,000, or 0·33 per cent. was spent on research directly related to deafness.

The term "sensory problems" in the question is taken to mean simultaneous impairment of both sight and hearing; £11,600 was spent on research relevant to this problem. In addition, £109,100 was spent on research relevant to sight impairment.

Following are the projects supported by the Department in 1983-84 and still current.

Research Projects on Deafness supported by DHSS in 1983-84 and still current

1. "Development of techniques for the fitting and for the assessment of benefits resulting from the issue of higher-power hearing aids to persons with severe hearing loss". C. G. Rice, Southampton University.
2. "Effects of visual, auditory and tactile cues on lip-reading performance in deaf adults". Dr. G. Fenn, School of Clinical Medicine, Cambridge University.
3. "Evaluation Trials on a Neonatal Auditory Response Cradle" Mr. J. Bennett, Brunel University.

The following current project is concerned with hearing impairment in children, but as it is also concerned with other types of physical disablement, it is not included in the financial total given in the accompanying reply. DHSS support for the project totalled £70,200 in 1983-84: "Child Health Education Study". Professor N. R. Butler, Bristol University.

British Sign Language

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider funding a national centre for research into the British sign language.

Mr. Newton: A meeting is being arranged to discuss British sign language research with the panel of four principal national organisations representing deaf people and their interests.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hearing therapists have been fully trained; how many are being trained at present; and what are the future plans.

Mr. Newton: 54 hearing therapists have completed their training and 10 are on the present course at the City Literary Institute. The National Health Service Training Authority has asked health authorities to nominate candidates for the next course and interviews are to be held next month.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present cost of training hearing therapists; and what is the estimated cost for future training.

Mr. Newton: The present cost, which is not expected to increase greatly, is approximately £5,000 for each student.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to improve and expand the facilities for training hearing therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The extent of future training will depend on the demand for hearing therapists by health authorities.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of deaf people who benefit from the care of hearing therapists; and what is his estimate of the numbers who will benefit in the next few years.

Mr. Newton: Information is not held centrally about the case loads of individual hearing therapists and there are no accurate indications on which to base estimates of numbers who might benefit from their work.

Vitamin E

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies have been made by his Department of the beneficial effects of vitamin E when taken as a supplement to the normal diet; and if he is satisfied that adequate levels of vitamin E are contained in the normal diet of a normal British person.

Mr. John Patten: None, since I am advised that vitamin E deficiency does not constitute a health problem in the United Kingdom. I understand that the normal British diet provides adequate amounts of vitamin E.

Nuclear War (Medical Supplies)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific progress has been made during the last five years by his Department in establishing methods for stockpiling medical supplies in the event of a nuclear war.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Homes for the Elderly

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his reply of 16 April, Official Report, column 159, to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington, if he will list those local authorities who opened homes for the elderly in 1984 stating in each case the number of places available and the cost of the building.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. The local authorities which showed an increase in their numbers of statutory homes between 31 March 1983 and 31 March 1984 are as follows, together with the increase in the number of statutory homes and places:

Local authorities (England)	Increase between 31 March 1983 and 31 March 1984

Information about the building costs is not held centrally.

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest available figure for the number of households in receipt of supplementary benefit who are subject to payment of fuel direct, where such payment exceeds the amount allowed for fuel bills in their supplementary benefit, including any special additions which such households are claiming to cover fuel costs; what are the figures for the number of such households who are tenants of (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) private landlords; what are the figures for the total number of households in receipt of supplementary benefit and who were tenants of (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) private landlords; and if he will give these figures for Great Britain as a whole, for England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not available in the form requested.

There is no specific amount for heating or any other item in the supplementary benefit scale rates. It is generally for claimants themselves to decide how to spend their benefit. Heating additions may be given to claimants who need to spend extra on heating but the available information on fuel direct arrangements relates to all such arrangements regardless of whether heating additions are being paid. Table 1 gives the latest available breakdown of fuel direct arrangements, as at December 1982.

Notes:

1. Some claimants have direct payment arrangements in respect of more than one type of fuel so the total number of claimants affected will be less than the total number of arrangements.

2. The figures do not differentiate between direct payment arrangements which cover both arrears and current consumption of fuel and arrangements which cover current consumption only.

3. Separate figures are not available for different types of tenure.

We estimate that we are now administering about 300,000 fuel direct arrangements, but a more detailed breakdown is not available.

Table 2 gives the latest available figures for householders on supplementary benefit, broken down by tenure type, as at December 1982:

Notes:

1. Excludes rent-free and rates-free cases.
2. Number of housing association tenants is not recorded separately from number of other private tenants.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the number of households in receipt of supplementary benefit who are subject to payment of (i) fuel arrears direct, (ii) rent arrears direct and (iii) both fuel arrears and rent arrears direct as tenants of (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) private landlords; what are the figures for the total number of households in receipt of supplementary benefit and who were tenants of (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) private landlords at the same date; and if he will give these figures for Great Britain as a whole, for England and Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Whitney: For information on payments of fuel arrears direct I refer the hon. Member to my other reply to her today. For rent arrears direct this information is not available in the form requested. The latest available figures are for December 1982, and relate to the position prior to the full introduction of the housing benefit scheme. These figures do not differentiate between the rent arrears direct and rent direct. Separate information is not available for housing association tenants nor for those cases where both fuel arrears and rent arrears are paid direct.

NHS (Leaflets)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library copies of the responses which he receives from those hospitals and health centres to whom he plans to send leaflets describing progress in the National Health Service under this administration.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Computer Bed Bank

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate when the West Midlands regional health authority will instigate a pilot scheme incorporating a computer bed bank for hospital waiting lists.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that a project co-ordinator has been appointed by the region and has now started work on the project. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his suggestions in relation to this project.

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to seek consultations with representatives of the British Medical Association and the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry to discuss the procedure adopted by some general practitioners of prescribing brand named drugs on the banned list under their generic names; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Community Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies he is presently conducting to examine changes in the level of community care resources to meet the increase in demand for social services facilities.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Hospital Beds)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reductions there have been in the number of National Health Service hospital beds in each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of available beds in National Health Service hospitals from 1979 to 1983, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, are given in the table. It should be noted that the number of in-patient cases treated rose from 5,400,000 in 1979 to 6,019,000 in 1983 and the number of cases treated per available bed rose from 14·9 to 17·5 over this period.

EC (Anti-poverty Scheme)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if groups receiving Manpower Services Commission money will be able to use this as matching national funds in relation to projects under the European Economic Community anti-poverty scheme.

Mr. John Patten: The matching local contributions which applicants for financial assistance from the community under this programme are required to obtain may be derived from any United Kingdom source whether public or private including the Manpower Services Commission, provided that there is no question of duplicate funding for the same activities.

Fairhaven Experimental Nursing Home

Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to public funds per patient per week of running the Fairhaven experimental nursing home in Lancashire, including provision for amortisation of cost of construction; and how the amortisation has been calculated.

Mr. John Patten: The running costs of the Fairhaven experimental nursing home have been calculated by the district health authority as £231 per patient week, at November 1984 cost levels. Total capital costs for purchase and alterations to the property amounting to £655,000 have not been amortised in that figure.

Nurses

Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions as to patient to nursing staff ratios in private sector nursing homes he makes in determining the level per patient at which such homes are reimbursed for patients placed in their care on behalf of the State.

Mr. John Patten: It is for district health authorities, which are responsible for the registration and inspection of private nursing homes, to ensure that adequate nurse staffing ratios are maintained in each home according to individual circumstances and to negotiate the terms of any contractual arrangements for the care of National Health Service patients in such homes.

TRANSPORT

Tourist Buses (Westminster)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed the parking of tourist buses in the City of Westminster with officials of that council, the Metropolitan police and the London Visitor and Convention Bureau; and with what result.

Mrs. Chalker: I have had no direct discussions with all bodies together, although meetings have taken place at official level. We are continuing to examine the situation to see what further action can be taken. I shall be meeting with members of Westminster city council shortly to discuss the general issue of coaches in London. The issue will remain on my continuing agenda for discussions with the Metropolitan police.

Transport Licensing Inquiries

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he received from the Council on Tribunals in connection with the regulations made under statutory instrument 176 of 1984 concerning transport licensing inquiries; and what account he took of these.

Mrs. Chalker: The council made several comments when consulted on the draft regulations. Most of these were covered in S.I. 176/1984, other than a proposal that it should include basic procedures for hearings. The council has recently asked informally whether we propose to issue guidance notes to persons making representations at public inquiries; I have asked the licensing authorities for their views on that suggestion.

Trains and Buses (Timing)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a general direction to the chairman of British Railways and the National Bus Company better to co-ordinate the timing of connecting trains and buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has no plans to give any general directions on the matter to the chairmen concerned but the ending of local bus monopoly and the introduction of passenger-hungry competitive bus services can be expected to lead to bus services better meeting public demand.

Lighthouse Service

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has held any consultations with (a) Trinity House, (b) the Commissioners of Northern Lighthouses or (c) the Commissioners of Irish Lights to discuss the reorganisation of the lighthouse service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Because of my right hon. Friend's statutory responsibility for expenditure from the general lighthouse fund my Department has close and frequent discussion with all these bodies on a wide range of matters that affect, or are effected by, the organisation of the services that each provides. There have been no discussions with any of them about reorganisation of the lighthouse service as a whole, but last autumn I had most useful and constructive discussions with Trinity House which led on to the restructuring of their Lighthouse Board. This now includes four outside directors of wide business and technical experience.

Space Saver Car Wheels

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with the safety aspects of space saver car wheels.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend the answer which I gave on 10 December 1984, to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) at column 338.

Toyota Space Cruiser (Brakes)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take in view of recent test findings of serious safety problems with the braking system of the Toyota Space Cruiser, to seek the recall of these vehicles.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department has considered the allegations of braking instability levelled against the Toyota Space Cruiser and is conducting tests on several vehicles. The findings will be presented to the manufacturers in the near future. I shall make a statement on the outcome as soon as possible after that meeting.

Severn Bridge (Tolls)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the report submitted to him in November 1984 following the public inquiry held in Bristol in July 1984 regarding his proposal to increase toll charges on the Severn Bridge.

Mrs. Chalker: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 2 April at column 555.

Buses

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he is making in drawing up arrangements to protect bus employees' pension rights after the enactment of the Transport Bill.

Mr. David Mitchell: The accrued pension rights of employees of the National Bus Company will continue to be protected by the assets of the two funds involved. We will wish to ensure that these are adequately funded at the time of privatisation.

We are discussing the arrangements for PTE and district council staff transferring to the new public transport companies with local authority representatives. We are seeking to facilitate a range of options for the new companies including the option of staff remaining in the local government superannuation scheme.

M25 (Opening Dates)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the most recent estimates of the likely completion dates and any opening dates for the remaining sections of the M25.

Mrs. Chalker: We expect to have the whole of the M25 open to traffic by the end of 1986. The actual opening dates of the remaining sections will depend on the progress made by individual contractors, which in turn is influenced by weather and ground conditions.

The current contract completion dates for the unfinished sections are as follows:—

M4-M40—end July 1985
Wisley-Leatherhead—August 1985
Leatherhead-Reigate—August 1985
Leatherhead Interchange—Complete but opening depends on contracts either side.
Poyle-M4—mid September 1985
M4 Interchange—mid June 1986
Swanley-Sevenoaks—early July 1986
Bedmond Road-A405—Mid September 1986
Micklefield Green-Bedmond Road—early October 1986
The Bell-South Mimms—end October 1986
A405-The Bell (A6)—beginning November 1986

Road Safety

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the Transport Committee's recommendations for improved road safety.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend will be responding shortly to this report.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet able to announce the date of the public inquiry into the proposed east London river crossing.

Mrs. Chalker: I hope to do so shortly.

BR (Overseas Supplies)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his consent is required for major purchases by British Rail from overseas suppliers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Railways Board is responsible for its own puchasing decisions. We expect it to follow the principles of the Government's public purchasing policy.

SCOTLAND

Royal Commissions

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many royal warrants establishing Royal Commissions he and his predecessors have signed since 1955; what where the subjects the commissoners investigated; on what dates they were established; who chaired them; and on what dates they reported.

Mr. Younger: The information is as follows:

Subjects Investigated	Date Established	Chairman	Date Reported
University Education in Dundee	3 May 1951	Baron Tedder	April 1952
Scottish Affairs 1952-54	25 July 1952	The Earl of Balfour	July 1954
Local Government in Scotland 1966-69	9 June 1966	The Right Hon. Lord Wheatley	September 1969
Legal Services in Scotland	25 October 1976	The Right Hon. Lord Hughes CBE	May 1980

Job Creation

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in the Greenock travel-to-work area between the ages of 40 and 50 years are presently unemployed but engaged in retraining programmes.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The precise information requested is not available, but at 30 March 1985, 11 unemployed people aged between 40 and 50 years were undertaking retraining on programmes run by the Manpower Services Commission in Inverclyde and Renfrew districts. In addition, some long-term unemployed people in temporary jobs funded under the community programme in these areas will be receiving training.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to increase the allocation of community programme places in Inverclyde.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Employment to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 25 March.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the training in new technologies available under the youth training scheme in Inverclyde is adequate to meet the demand.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The provision of new technology training through the Youth Training Scheme—YTS—is adjusted each year in relation to the local demands of industry and young people. More than 300 YTS places available to young persons in Inverclyde involve significant elements of training in new technologies. In addition, all YTS trainees receive an introduction to computer literacy and information technology during their training programmes.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in the Greenock travel-to-work area have received the enterprise allowance since its inception; how many are presently in receipt of the allowance; and how many continue trading after 18 months.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested. In the Greenock travel-to-work area, 178 people joined the enterprise allowance scheme from August 1983 until 17 April 1985. A total of 106 people were receiving the allowance at the latter date.

Information on how businesses fare when payment of the allowance ceases is not yet available for the scheme nationally, but experience in the pilot areas suggests that about 70 per cent. of all businesses supported were still trading 18 months after joining the scheme.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the registered insured population, male and female, are in part-time employment in the Greenock travel-to-work area.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The latest available information on employment is taken from the 1981 census of employment, and relates to the travel-to-work area prior to last year's review. In September 1981, 14·4 per cent. of the registered insured population — employees in employment plus unemployed — were in part-time employment. The corresponding figures for males and females were 2·7 per cent. and 30·9 per cent. respectively.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places there are in sheltered employment in the Greenock travel-to-work area; and if there is a waiting list.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On 16 April 1985, there was a total of 38 filled places supported under the sheltered employment programme in the Greenock travel-to-work area. There is no waiting list for the sheltered workshop in the area.

District Licensing Boards

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints from the licensed trade and from the public were received by district licensing boards in each year from 1970 to 1984.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available centrally.

Licensed Trade (Licence Extensions)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) regular extensions and (b) special extensions were granted to the licensed trade by category of licence in the period 1970 to 1984 by year.

Mr. Ancram: Following consultation with police and local authority interests the collection of licensing statistics was curtailed in 1980 and discontinued thereafter. The numbers of regular extensions and special permissions granted to the licensed trade in each year up to 1980 are shown in the "Civil Judicial Statistics, Scotland" copies of which are available in the Library. The numbers of regular permissions and special permissions granted since 1981 could not be ascertained without disproportionate cost.

Drunk Driving

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many successful prosecutions for drunk driving were effected for each year from 1970 to 1984.

Mr. Ancram: The number of charges proved in Scotland from 1970 to 1984 of driving or being in charge of a motor vehicle while unfit through drink or drugs, or while blood alcohol content is above the prescribed limit; and of failing to provide breath, blood or urine specimens, are given in the following table.

Year	Charges proved
1970	8,767
1971	10,109
1972	10,480
1973	11,989
1974	12,689
1975	12,168
1976	10,137
1977	9,170
1978	11,086
1979	11,435
1980	12,513
1981	11,244
1982	10,429
1983	11,556
1984*	12,212

* Provisional.

Rating Revaluation

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of the increases in the commercial rating sector resulting from the 1985 revaluation in Scotland, according to the categories shops, offices, hotels and miscellaneous, both for Scotland as a whole and by regional and island authorities.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available centrally at the present time.

Forestry Commission (Land Sales)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acres of Forestry Commission land Her Majesty's Government plan to sell each year for the next five years; and what is the corresponding value of the land to be sold in each case.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 8 November 1984, at columns 6-7. The estimate of receipts from sales over the period is not linked to any fixed acreage of land.

List D Schools

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many staff in the list D sector are currently undertaking training on courses leading to the Certificate of Social Service or Certificate of Qualification in Social Work;

(2) how many staff in the list D sector have been seconded for training leading to the Certificate of Social Service and Certificate of Qualification in Social Work in each of the past five years; and what is the anticipated number, in each case, for the year 1985-86;

(3) what has been the Scottish Office budget in each of the past five years for the professional training of social work staff employed in the list D sector.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

No. of Staff

	CSS	CQSW	Estimated Cost
1980-81	9	5	£127,000
1981-82	3	3	£135,000
1982-83	5	6	£149,500
1983-84	3	5	£158,000
1984-85	3	3	£162,000

Eleven staff are currently undertaking training courses but no new applications are being accepted for support for secondment for the year 1985-86. Estimates include the costs of training and of staff replacements.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total number of referrals to list D schools in each of the past five years; and how many of these were second referrals.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Admissions	934	957	851	910	791
Re-admissions (including absconders for more than 14 days)	22	28	28	37	43

Building Societies

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has caused the delay in reaching agreement with the building societies on the arrangements required to enable building societies to accept repaired prefabricated reinforced concrete as being suitable for a loan on their security.

Mr. Ancram: The guarantee scheme arrangements are complex, involving as they do the insurance of PRC houses once repaired by approved methods and builders. Greater difficulties than had been expected arose in reaching agreement amongst the bodies concerned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Aid

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross national product was spent on overseas aid in 1980, 1981, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Luce: The percentage of gross national product devoted to overseas aid in the years from 1980 to 1984 was as follows:

Year	per cent.
1980	0·35
1981	0·43
1982	0·37
1983	0·35
1984	0·33

Food Aid

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many tons of cereals under the plan approved at the Dublin summit of European Economic Community Ministers have been delivered to the following countries: Sudan, Ethiopia, Chad, Mali and Burkina Faso in the months of February and March; and how much is estimated to be delivered in April, May and June.

Mr. Luce: The day-to-day management of the European Community's food aid programme is the responsibility of the European Commission. The Dublin plan also included commitments by member states of the Community. According to information provided at the coordination meeting held on 21 February, overall delivery plans by the Community and member states, were as follows:

Metric tonnes of wheat or wheat equivalent

	February	March	April	May	June
Ethiopia	66,000	72,000	68,000	52,000	30,000
Sudan	3,500	2,400	27,000	40,000	10,000
Chad	12,000	21,000	5,000	16,000	*
Mali	18,000	29,000	4,000	14,000	*
Burkina Faso	2,000	—	15,000	—	*

* Not available

These figures do not include all food aid provided by the Community and member states channelled through international organisations locally purchased cereals, or food bought with cash grants to international and voluntary organisations. Some of the deliveries relate to commitments made before the Dublin Council.

Sudan

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many tons of British food aid to Sudan have been shipped and delivered to Port Sudan in the month of March and are due to be delivered in April, May and June.

Mr. Luce: A total of 22,000 tonnes of wheat and almost 10,000 tonnes of wheatflour — equivalent to 13,000 tonnes of wheat—is due to be delivered to Port Sudan in May. This represents the full extent of present British food aid commitments. Our most recent shipment, of 15,000 tonnes, reached Port Sudan in January 1985.

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made to distribute British food aid in Sudan.

Mr. Luce: The shipment due to arrive in May consists of:

(a) 17,000 tonnes of wheat, which will be distributed by agreement with the Government of the Sudan under arrangements to be monitored by the World Food Programme—WFP—on our behalf;

(b) just under 10,000 tonnes of wheatflour which the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—UNHCR—will sell to the Sudanese Government for re-sale on agreed conditions within Sudan; the proceeds will be used to finance UNHCR refugee programmes in Sudan;

(c) 5,000 tonnes provided under the International Emergency Food Reserve administered by the World Food Programme—WFP—which will be responsible for distribution.

We are providing £232,000 to the WFP to buy the fuel needed to distribute the food in Sudan. The WFP was responsible for distributing the 15,000 tonnes of wheat which arrived in Sudan in January 1985. A shipment of wheatflour was provided in November 1984 to the UNHCR on a similar basis to that described above.

Industrial Promotion

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions are issued to the commercial staff in the United Kingdom overseas posts on how particular areas of British industry are to be promoted.

Mr. Rifkind: Commercial staff at Her Majesty's embassies, high commissions and consulates perform their duties according to a standard set of instructions which is constantly under review and amended to take account of changing demands.

Our export promotion services are available equally to all manufacturing and services sectors. Where particularly important export opportunities are identified, the Department of Trade and Industry and the British Overseas Trade Board at home and the diplomatic service posts overseas together work closely with the relevant sectors of industry to exploit them.

Arms Control

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made at the conference on disarmament in discussion of outer space arms control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to report that on 29 March the conference on disarmament unanimously agreed to set up an ad hoc committee on outer space. The committee has been mandated in the first instance to identify, through substantive examination, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space. It will take into account all existing agreements, existing proposals and future initiatives. We have been actively involved in the establishment of this committee and look forward to playing a full part in its work.

Middle East

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Damascus the text of the 14 point political programme broadcast on Radio Damascus on 25 March by Mr. Ahmad Al-Yamani, on behalf of the Palestinian National Salvation Front, which calls for increased violence, the overthrow of the Egyptian Government and the negation of the purported agreement between King Hussein and Yasir Arafat; and what implications this has for the implementation of that section of the Venice declaration which calls for the Palestine Liberation Organisation to be associated with the peace process;

(2) what information he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Damascus about the formation on 25 March of a Palestinian National Salvation Front comprising the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the Fatah Provisional Command, headed by Abu Musa, and several other Palestinian guerilla groups; and what advice he has received about their willingness to accept United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 and take part in peaceful negotiations.

Mr. Luce: The groups which formed the Palestinian National Salvation Front are reported to have rejected the agreement between King Hussein and the Palestine Liberation Organisation to work for a settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute based on the exchange of territory for peace. We welcomed this agreement as a useful step and shall continue to encourage constructive moves by the parties directly concerned towards peace negotiations at which the voice of the Palestinians would be heard.

British Protected Persons

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimate of the number of British protected persons; where they are located; how many do not possess an additional nationality or citizenship status; and what steps are being taken to bring the status to an end.

Mr. Renton: Not all British protected persons abroad register with our missions, so it is not possible to give a reliable estimate of their number. However, records held by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office suggest that the total figure is well under 10,000, the majority of them resident in eastern and central Africa and in India.

No estimate can be given of how many British protected persons possess an additional nationality or citizenship status, but since 1 January 1983 a person has lost British protected person status automatically on the acquisition of another nationality.

As there are no remaining protectorates or protected states from which the status can be derived, and because it is now lost on the acquisition of another nationality and is transmissible only in certain very limited circumstances where a child would otherwise be stateless, the number of British protected persons will steadily diminish until the status eventually becomes extinct.

Credit Card Companies (VAT)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, while not releasing the correspondence to the public, he will make available to hon. Members considering the Value Added Tax (Finance) Order 1985 (S.I., 1985, No. 432), a copy of the letter from the European Economic Community Commission threatening infraction proceedings on the value added tax treatment of credit card companies, before 23 April.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will make available to members of the Select Committee on Statutory Instruments a summary of the letter in time for their consideration of the matter on 23 April.

Africa (Famine Relief)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list, in pounds sterling, the total amount of aid given by Her Majesty's Government for famine relief in Africa for each of the years 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, including pledges, and the corresponding figures for all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 25 March, at column 40, by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development giving details of aid for famine relief in calendar years 1983 and 1984 of some £26 million and £79 million respectively. Such figures are not available for 1982. We announced at the United Nations conference on Africa in Geneva on 11 March that our famine related aid in financial year 1985-86 will be at least £60 million. If more is needed, we will of course add all we can. We do not have corresponding figures for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Grants in Aid

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the organisations to which his Department makes grants in aid.

Mr. Luce: The international and regional organisations and United Kingdom-based institutions and voluntary agencies in receipt of grants in aid are separately identified in the Supply Estimates for class II overseas aid and other overseas services—Votes 1, 3, 4 and 8 in 1984-85 and Votes 1, 3, 4 and 7 in 1985-86. A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

Overseas Students (Support)

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about the Government's plans for overseas student support when the current provision comes to an end in April 1986.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We believe that our policy of targeted support is very much in the national interest. We have, therefore, made financial provision to continue support for overseas students beyond 1985-86 along the lines of that made under the "Pym package". Given the current financial constraints, the provision has had to be reduced somewhat. Exact details for 1986-87 have yet to be decided. Neverthless, it is intended that the support will continue to be made to the three country-territory schemes for Cyprus, Malaysia and Hong Kong and for certain other dependent territories. Additional support to the Commonwealth scholarship and fellowship plan, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's scholarships and awards scheme and to the British Council's work for the promotion of British higher education overseas will also continue.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Unborn Children (Protection) Bill

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what grounds he is advised that the provisions of the Unborn Children (Protection) Bill would prevent investigation of embryos prior to insertion to avoid the insertion of embryos which are carriers of genetic disorders or otherwise abnormal.

Mr. Brooke: As I stated in my answer on 3 April to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) at columns 616-17, the Unborn Children (Protection) Bill would prevent research on the development of safe thechniques for the investigation of embryos prior to insertion into the womb. It would clearly be unacceptable to insert an embryo which has been subjected to any procedures until the safety of such procedures had been tested and the risk of inducing abnormal development excluded. It is the Medical Research Council's view that further studies with human embryos are necessary to establish both the safety of the embryonic biopsy techniques and the efficiency of the methods for the detection of abnormalities; and that the embryos used in such studies cannot be ones intended for implantation.

Overseas Students

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the number of overseas students in United Kingdom educational institutions in 1979-80 and each succeeding year; what is the estimated cost of their education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The numbers of students from abroad in Great Britain since 1979-80 are shown in the table:

	Thousands
1979-80	82·4
1980-81	72·4
1981-82	61·4
1982-83	54·1
1983-84	53·9

It is not possible to estimate readily the cost of their educaton, but students from abroad—other than those who are entitled to pay the home rate of fee—are now expected to pay fees that cover the full cost.

Menieres Disease

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding is given to research into Menieres disease; and how much grant support the Medical Research Council gives to such research.

Mr. Brooke: The Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. I understand that Menieres disease is characterised by tinnitus, deafness and intermittent attacks of giddiness. In the financial year 1983-84 MRC's expenditure on research into hearing and balance disorders — including expenditure on projects which could prove relevant to these conditions — was £2,170,000. Out of this total, £160,000 was spent on tinnitus and £1,409,000 on deafness and balance disorders. The council is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through its research grant scheme in competition with other applications.

Research work on and relevant to Menieres disease may also be conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee, but details of such work are not collected centrally. The medical charities may also be funding work in this field.

Teachers (Dispute)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what requests he has received from directors of local education authorities and from teachers to provide further financing with a view to terminating the present teachers' dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have received about 1,000 letters from teachers, many arguing that additional resources should be made available for teachers' pay. I have also received a letter from the chief education officer of Sheffield local education authority enclosing a copy of a statement by the chairman of the authority's schools sub-committee expressing similar views.

Teachers (West Midlands)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will pay an official visit to meet primary and secondary school teachers in the west midlands.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall be addressing a meeting of the Birmingham branch of the National Association of Head Teachers on 13 May. I hope also to visit Staffordshire in September, as part of a continuing series of visits to schools and local education authorities. No programme has yet been arranged, but I would expect it to include some discussion with teachers.

Diet

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage greater health education on the role of diet in relation to disease.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has recently drawn the attention of the school examining boards to the report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy on "Diet and Cardiovascular Disease" and has asked they take its findings into account in their examination syllabuses. In addition, the national criteria for GCSE examinations in home economics, published last month, emphasise dietary goals related to health in relevant syllabuses.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many officials of his Department, and from which sections, have attended meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council; and if he will list the dates and locations of such meetings and the subjects discussed.

Mr. Brooke: Officials attend meetings under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council (AIIC) according to the subject under discussion. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to give information about meetings of officials.

Handicapped Children

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of handicapped children who have been educated in ordinary primary and secondary schools in the West Midlands county in each school year since 1979-80; and what resources have beeen allocated to local education authorities in that area to enable them to put into practice effectively the provisions of the Education Act 1981 since its introduction.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Number of Handicapped Pupils in Ordinary Schools in the West Midlands County in January of each year.

Year	Number
1981	1,041
1982	1,169
1983	1,566
1984	1,402

Comparable information for 1980 is not available.

Account is taken of the costs of educating children with special educational needs in assessing each authority's grant-related expenditure, which underlies the annual distribution of the rate support grant settlement. It is for individual local education authorities to decide how to use the resources available to them.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financing he intends to make available to local education authorities to enable them to improve facilities in teacher training courses for instruction on special needs of handicapped children within ordinary primary and secondary school environments.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he expects local authorities to contain within existing provision any additional expenditure which they may incur in implementing criteria for the approval of initial teacher training courses issued in April 1984, including the requirement that students should be introduced to ways of identifying children with special educational needs, helped to appreciate what the ordinary school can and cannot do for such children, and given some knowledge of the specialist help available and how it can be enlisted. Training in special educational needs in ordinary schools has been designated a national priority area under the in-service teacher training grants scheme, introduced in 1983-84. In the financial year 1985-86, £13·4 million in total will be made available to LEAs towards the cost of employing replacement teachers for those released for training in the various priority areas designated under the scheme.

Nursing Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children in each county in England and Wales have been in a nursery school or a nursery classs and received nursery education prior to entry into school; what percentage of the age group this represents in each case; and how many have received more than 12 months' nursery education.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not collected centrally. I would, however, refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave on 27 March, at columns 213-16, for information on children receiving nursery education as at January 1984. Information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the Association of County Councils and the Association of Municipal Authorities to discuss teachers' pay.

Sir Keith Joseph: I last met the Council of Local Education Authorities, which comprises members of the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, on 6 March to discuss the machinery for negotiating teachers' pay in the context of the current pay dispute.

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received during the past five years about the differing treatment of the dependants of male and female contributors to the teachers' superannuation scheme; and what response he has made.

Mr. Dunn: During the past five years we have received many letters from individual teachers and hon. Members on this subject. In addition the teachers' unions have pressed for equalisation of family benefits, notably within the teachers' superannuation working party on which the Department and employers are also represented. My right hon. Friend has accepted that in principle there should be equality in the treatment of dependants as in all other features of the scheme, but has said that the consequential costs cannot be ignored. To date, neither the teachers nor employers have expressed a willingness to bear any share of the increased contributions that would be required.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the cost of providing equal treatment for the dependants of male and female contributors to the teachers' superannuation scheme.

Mr. Dunn: The Government Actuary has calculated that to provide the dependants of female members who die in future with all those benefits available to the dependants of male members would initially cost some £3·4 million per annum rising on maturity of the family benefits provisions to about £65 million per annum; and that this would increase the contributions required to cover the costs of teachers' superannuation by 0·7 per cent. of salary for all members.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Overseas Investment

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will give the latest estimate of British private investment overseas for 1984-85; and if he will make a statement about future trends.

Mr. Peter Rees: The preliminary figure for British private investment overseas in 1984 is £15,159 million. Future levels will depend on a complex of market factors that would make any forecast unreliable.

Tax Allowances

Ms. Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the increase in child benefit which could be obtained for a similar cost to that of the proposed change in married couples' tax allowances.

Mr. Moore: The cost of the proposed changes in personal taxation will depend upon a number of factors, principally the level of the single allowance under the new system, so it is not possible to give a single figure for a corresponding increase in child benefit.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people received (a) the single person's age allowance and (b) the married man's age allowance in 1984-85; and if he will estimate how many people will receive respectively, each allowance in 1985-86.

Mr. Moore: Estimates of the numbers of aged taxpayers receiving age allowances, either in full or in part, are as follows:

	Single people	Married couples
1984-85	1,110,000	890,000
1985-86	1,070,000	860,000

These numbers do not include those completely taken out of tax by the existence of age allowance.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people ceased to pay income tax in 1984-85 (a) when the single person's age allowance rose from £2,360 to £2,490 and (b) when the married man's age allowance rose from £3,755 to £3,955;

(2) how many people will cease to pay tax in 1985-86 (a) because of the rise in the single person's age allowance from £2,490 to £2,690 and (b) because of the rise in the married man's age allowance from £3,955 to £4,255.

Mr. Moore: The following table shows the estimated reduction in the number of aged taxpayers in 1984-85 and 1985-86, compared with the position if age allowances had remained at their levels of 1983-84 and 1984-85 respectively.

	Reductions in aged taxpayers
	Single people	Married couples
1984-85	85,000	70,000
1985-86	125,000	105,000

Exchange Rate

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the changes in the exchange rate of the pound sterling to the dollar and in the minimum lending rate since he presented his Budget on 19 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Credit Card Companies

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the basis on which credit card companies have their transactions with traders treated for value added tax purposes in each member state of the EEC and the extent to which these various practices are consistent with the changes proposed for British credit card companies in the recent Budget.

Mr. Hayhoe: The position is understood to be as follows. These transactions are exempt in the other member states with value added taxes; Greece has not yet introduced a value added tax. But Belgium, Germany and France permit card companies to elect to treat their supplies as taxable, an option available to member states under the European Community's sixth directive on value added tax. The change proposed by my right hon. Friend provides for these transactions to be exempt in the United Kingdom. But as the change is intended to raise revenue, the introduction of the option mentioned above is not appropriate.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the yield to the revenue in corporation tax, value added tax and other taxes, respectively, in consequence of the activities of credit card companies.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied that the changes proposed in the Budget for the value added tax treatment of credit card transactions are consistent with the sixth directive on value added tax of the Common Market Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Yes.

VAT

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the extent to which Her Majesty's Government are committed to seeking the harmonisation of value added tax levies and rules in consequence of their Common Market obligations.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Government accept as binding those EC obligations relating to value added tax which are currently in force; proposals of the Commission for further harmonisation are considered on their merits.

Government Departments (Expenditure)

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the estimated spending in Government Departments on telephone calls and standing charges in 1985-86; and how this compares with 1980-81;

(2) what are the current on-cost averages for accommodation in central London, outer London and the provinces for every £100 of Civil Service staff salary; and how this compares with 1980-81;

(3) what is the estimated spending by Government Departments on travel and the purchase of cars and lorries in 1985-86; and how this compares with spending in 1980-81;

(4) what is the estimated spending in Government Departments on reprographics in 1985-86; and how this compares with spending in 1980-81;

(5) what is the current estimated cost to public funds of typing a page in a Government Department in (a) central London, and (b) in outer London; and how this compares with 1980-81.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Budget)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in adopting a European Economic Community budget for 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I expect to make a statement to the House later this week on the outcome of the 23 April Budget Council.

Pound Sterling

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since the end of 1982 the exchange rate of the pound sterling against those currencies within the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system has varied by more than the limits permitted by the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 36.]: The following table lists the months in which sterling's monthly average exchange rates against currencies in the EMS exchange rate mechanism have moved outside sterling's notional fluctuation margins since the end of 1982. The margins used are those pertaining at the end of December 1982. Since then, these margins have been changed three times, in March and May 1983 and September 1984.

ERM currencies	1983	1984	1985
Deutschemark	January-December	January; December	January-March
French franc	January-April; August-September	January; October-December	January-March
Lira	January-April	—	January-February
Belgian franc	January-May	March-December	January-March
Dutch guilder	January-December	January-December	January-March
Danish kroner	January-July; October-December	January-December	January-March
Irish punt	January-April; August-September November-December	January-February November-December	January-March

Note: investigation of fluctuations on a daily or more frequent basis would have been excessively costly.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what is his estimate of the cost of extending mortgage interest tax relief to (a) £35,000 and (b) £40,000 under (i) the present tax arrangements and (ii) if the relief was limited to standard rate of income tax.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 March 1985, c. 603.]: Assuming no consequential changes in the distribution of mortgages by amount outstanding, the direct revenue costs of the extra relief in a full year at 1985-86 levels of income and interest rates would be approximately as follows:

£ million

Limit qualifying for relief	Relief allowed: at taxpayers marginal rate	at basic rate only
£35,000	100	80
£40,000	125	100

In the cases where relief was restricted to the basic rate, there would also be a yield of some £280 million, in respect of interest qualifying under the present limit, which would offset the costs shown in the final column.

THE ARTS

European Community

30. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts what arrangements are made in the Office of Arts and Libraries to collate comparative statistics on arts expenditure in EEC countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Policy Studies Institute has published some international comparisons; its studies have been funded in part by the Office of Arts and Libraries. The Arts Council has also begun to collate comparative statistics, and will publish a series of reference sheets. There are difficult problems of comparing like with like, and the Arts Council is taking part in Council of Europe studies aimed at producing comparable figures.

Hallé Concert Society

Mr. Arnold asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts when the Minister for the Arts expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Hazel Grove of 11 February concerning the Hallé Concert Society.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister for the Arts, has written on Friday 19 April to my hon. Friend in reply to his letter about the Hallé Concert Society.

Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will make a statement outlining future policy on the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to make an announcement about the future of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Hall.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for the Arts made clear in answer to a similar question in another place, the Secretary of State will in due course have to assign the property rights and liabilities of metropolitan county councils to successor bodies by order under clause 95 of the Local Government Bill. Otherwise, property will pass to the appropriate residuary body under clause 60. Should it be necessary to make any incidental, transitional or supplementary provisions, the Secretary of State may by order do so under the provisions of clause 96. In considering such orders, the Secretary of State will give careful consideration to the views of the society and other interested parties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Alexander and Green

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Alexander and Green of 299 Park Avenue, New York, his Department's attorney in the case of Department of Economic Development v. Arthur Andersen & Co., brought in the southern district of New York, is to be remunerated on a contingent fee basis.

Dr. Boyson: No.

Industrial Disputes (Statistics)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many working days were lost in Northern Ireland by industrial disputes in 1984; and how this figure compares with those of Great Britain, the Irish Republic, the European Community as a whole and the United States of America.

Dr. Boyson: The number of working days lost during 1984 through industrial disputes in Northern Ireland, Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland is as follows:

	Working days lost
Northern Ireland	51,586
Great Britain	26,512,000
Republic of Ireland	385,161

Note: These figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Equivalent statistics in respect of the European Community as a whole and the United States of America are not readily available. Further information on international comparisons generally is published in the April 1985 issue of the Employment Gazette, a copy of which will be available in the Library.

Community Physicians

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the target of his Department and the health and social services boards for the provision of community physicians per 100,000 population.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 7 February 1985.

Community Medicine (Specialists)

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vacancies for specialists in community medicine have existed in each of the health and social services boards in the last three months; how many of these vacancies have been advertised; and how many posts have been filled.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Health and Social Services Board	Current number of vacancies	Number advertised in past three months	Number filled in past three months
Eastern	*5	—	—
Northern	1	1	—
Southern	1	—	—
Western	2	1	1

* Of these vacancies, three are being filled on a locum basis.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pâté de Foie Gras

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ban the importation of pâté de foie gras.

Mrs. Fenner: No. The method of feeding geese for the production of pâté de foie gras has been examined by both the Council of Europe and the European Parliament, following expert advice. Neither body saw reason to restrict or prohibit it.

Badgers

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the location and number of badgers killed in 1982, 1983, 1984 and so far in 1985, respectively, under the anti-bovine tuberculosis campaign.

Mrs. Fenner: The number of badgers take in official investigations are as set out in the table:

	1982	1983	1984*	1985 to 31 March*
Avon	127	113	82	55
Clywd	0	8	0	0
Cornwall	146	167	375	57
Cumbria	0	14	22	0
Devon	74	201	189	15
Dorset	0	18	120	31
Dyfed	76	79	26	0
Gloucester	352	521	389	53
Somerset	16	3	0	0
Staffordshire	71	54	25	0
Sussex East	14	0	48	0
Wiltshire	129	61	58	21
Totals	1,005	1,239	1,334	232

* Provisional.

The figures for 1982 exclude badgers killed by gassing before the suspension of gassing in June of that year.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further plans he has to kill badgers.

Mrs. Fenner: In accordance with current policy my Department will continue to take action against badgers when tuberculous badgers pose a threat to cattle. I will in due course be reviewing that policy in the light of the recommendations made to me by the team which I have appointed to re-examine the problem of badgers and bovine tuberculosis.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the report of Professor Dunnet's review team considering the slaughter of badgers.

Mrs. Fenner: I hope that Professor Dunnet's review team will be in a position to report its findings to me and the Secretary of State for Wales by autumn this year.

Oysters

Mr. Viggers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the causes of shell-thickening and other deformities in the Pacific oyster known to his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: Very low levels of tributyl tin can cause deformities and shell malformation in the Pacific oyster. Other factors such as inherited abnormalities, disease and environmental trauma can reduce growth and may lead to malformation of the shell. However, in surveys and experiments carried out in estuaries in England and Wales which considered such factors, no cause other than tributyl tin has been found for this condition in the Pacific oyster.

Mr. Viggers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has undertaken into the causes of shell thickening and other deformities in the Pacific oyster.

Mr. MacGregor: Some research was carried out in the mid 1970s on the effect of suspended particulate material in the water on shell thickening of the Pacific oyster, but the results were inconclusive. In 1982, measurements were made of tributyl tin concentrations in estuarine waters and in Pacific oyster, and subsequently a comprehensive laboratory and field investigation has been carried out on the effects of TBT on all stages of the life cycle of this species. Reduced growth and shell malformation was observed in laboratory experiments with concentrations of TBT similar to that found in estuaries where this characteristic deformation of the Pacific oyster occurs. Oysters transferred from clean sites to these contaminated estuaries also developed characteristic thickening; in the reverse transfer, oysters with thickened shells began to grow normally. The results of these experiments have been published in the scientific press.

Mr. Viggers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the figure for the total numbers of people employed in the commercial production or fishing of (a) the Pacific oyster and (b) the native British oyster.

Mr. MacGregor: Information on levels of employment in the shellfish industry is not collected by my Department.

Tributyl-tin Oxide

Mr. Viggers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the species of shellfish or other marine life which, on the evidence available to his Department, are being adversely affected by the presence of tributyl-tin oxide in the natural environment.

Mr. MacGregor: The function of tributyl tin in marine antifouling paints is to kill all organisms which settle on the painted surface. Therefore, all such organisms in an estuary can be affected in this way, or by the TBT leached out of the paint. The evidence available from laboratory and field experiments indicates beyond reasonable doubt that the Pacific oyster is being adversely affected by concentrations of TBT currently present in some estuarine regions of the natural environment. It also strongly suggests that reproduction of the European flat oyster is adversely affected in these regions. It is extremely difficult to establish how many other species are being similarly affected. There is evidence that populations of some species have declined in recent years in estuaries which are known to contain concentrations of TBT at or about the parts per billion level. It is known that some species of algae and juvenile stages of marine molluscs, crustaceans and fish can be killed by short exposure in a laboratory to TBT concentrations in the parts per billion range; longer exposure to concentrations typical of those found in estuaries in which TBT can be detected is almost certain to be harmful to the sensitive stages of many marine species.

Chemicals (Draize Test)

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the chemicals used in agriculture which require to be tested by the Draize procedure.

Mrs. Fenner: The pesticides safety precautions scheme specifies that the irritancy of all pesticides be assessed, but does not require a Draize test for eye irritancy in every application for approval; each case is considered on its own merits. Further details may be found in the PSPS Book which is deposited in the library of the House. The PSPS specification also satisfies a general requirement of the European Community that all chemicals sold within the Community be evaluated for dangerous properties, including irritancy.

Rented Farms

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1955, 1965, 1975 and for the latest available year the ratio of farm rents to net farm income on rented farms.

Mr. MacGregor: I regret that this information is not available.

Pest Control

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is to be made mandatory for commercial operators and distributors of pesticides to be trained and certified in public health pest control.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government are taking powers in Part III of the Food and Environment Protection Bill to control the supply and use of pesticides. In our statements of intention on the implementation these powers we have suggested that it should be a requirement for suppliers, distributors and commercial operators to provide evidence to Ministers at intervals that they reach appropriate standards in the suitability of their premises, training or supervision of staff and competence of supervisors. The Government's suggestions on this and other aspects of this legislation will be subject to the views of Parliament and to the comments of all the interests affected, which will be consulted once the Bill is enacted.

Emergency Slaughter

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that animals for emergency slaughter are slaughtered at the farm rather than transported to an abattoir.

Mrs. Fenner: This matter is the subject of recommendations by the Farm Animal Welfare Council in its report on the welfare of livestock at the time of slaughter. The Government are considering the council's recommendations.

Imported Animals

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the species and numbers of animals imported into the United Kingdom during 1984.

Mrs. Fenner: The table shows the information requested:

United Kingdom imports of live animals (chiefly for food) 1984

	Number
Animals of the bovine species (including buffalos)
Pure bred breeding animals	1,010
Other than pure bred breeding stock—

Animals (Slaughter)

Mr. Philip Oppenheim asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken to ensure that animals in pain are slaughtered without delay.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Research and Development

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the cut in his Department's budget for research and development; and what proportion of these favoured an increase in the research and development budget.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 19 April 1985, c. 300]: I have received a number of representations expressing concern about the possible impact of the revised provisions for expenditure by the Agriculture Departments on research and development. Only one has suggested that expenditure in this area should be increased beyond previous planning levels.

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department's estimates of publicly-funded agricultural research and development given in the debate on 13 March, Official Report, column 412, included the amount spent in the university sector.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 19 April 1985, c. 300]: The figure of £160 million given in the debate included the amount spent in the university sector on contracted research. It did not include approximately £4·4 million in research grants awarded by the Agricultural and Food Research Council and approximately £1·4 million paid under postgraduate training schemes. In addition research is conducted in universities using funds allocated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science by way of block grants on the advice of the University Grants Committee.

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the main objectives of Government-supported agricultural research; and what long-term plans existed for such research.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 19 April 1985, c. 300]: The main objectives of Government-supported agricultural research are to advance scientific knowledge relevant to agriculture (including horticulture) in order to increase the efficiency of the industry, to safeguard and improve the quality of food for the community, to protect the environment and the welfare of farm animals and to prevent adverse social effects. The research programme is subject to regular review and Agriculture Ministers and the Agricultural and Food Research Council will be guided in their determination of future priorities by the advice of the Priorities Board on Research and Development in Agriculture and Food.

Third World Countries

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much Government-funded research and development into agriculture is of identifiable benefit to Third world countries.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 19 April 1985, c. 299]: Government-funded agricultural research and development is primarily directed to the needs of the United Kingdom industry and the domestic consumer. The research results are, however, available to Third world countries if they are appropriate to their needs. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs sponsors and supports a programme of research aimed at gathering new knowledge and evolving new techniques directly related to the needs of developing countries.

Young Farmers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what European Economic Community aid is available for young farmers and new entrants into agriculture;

(2) when he intends to implement the European Economic Community scheme for aid to young farmers and new entrants into agriculture.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 19 April 1985, c. 300]: The current EC directive on modernisation of farms, which expires at the end of September, contains provisions for enhanced aid for young farmers which were not implemented in the United Kingdom. Its replacement, the new EC agricultural structures regulation makes provision for installation premiums, enhanced aid and training for young farmers under 40. I hope to circulate a consultation paper setting out the Government's proposals on the implementation of the new structures measures before the end of this month.

DEFENCE

Arms Supplies (Sri Lanka)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Government policy concerning arms supplies to Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lee: It has always been, and will remain, the Government's policy to exercise strict control over the sale of arms and paramilitary equipment. Each potential sale if considered on its merits on a case by case basis, and a wide range of factors which include the stability of the region and the likely use to which the equipment would be put, are taken into account in each case before approval is given. Any proposals to sell defence equipment to Sri Lanka are subject to such detailed examination and full account is, of course, taken of the local situation.

Equipment Costs

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will furnish the costs, at current prices of (a) the Challenger main battle tank, fully equipped, (b) the S870 self-propelled Howitzer, (c) the 81mm mortar and (d) 8 tonne vehicles, various types;

(2) if he will furnish the costs at current prices, of (a) an airborne very high frequency radio for Air Training Corps use, (b) a high frequency radio receiver, (c) the Sidewinder air-to-air missile, (d) the helicopter-borne anti-tank missile, and (e) the battery of tracked Rapier;

(3) if he will furnish the costs, at current prices, of the following small arms (a) light support weapons and (b) personal weapons and of 81mm mortar round, personal weapon round, and SP70 Howitzer round ammunition, respectively;

(4) if he will furnish the costs, at current prices, of the following projects (a) Challenger main battle tank, initial order, (b) sonar, action information and fire control systems for patrol submarines, (c) Blowpipe air defence missile improvement programme (d) weapon handling and launching system for a patrol submarine, (e) the JP233 project and (f) ALARM missile programme;

(5) if he will furnish the costs, at current prices of (a) Hawk advanced trainer aircraft, (b) Nimrod aircraft, (c) Tornado F2 aircraft, (d) Tornado GR1 aircraft, (e) Chinook helicopter, (f) EH 101 helicopter, (g) Lynx helicopters, army version and (h) Puma helicopter;

(6) if he will furnish the costs, at current prices, of (a) a nuclear-powered fleet submarine, (b) a type 22 frigate, (c) a Hunt class mine counter-measures vessel, (d) a Castle class offshore patrol vessel and (e) a Sting Ray lightweight torpedo.

Mr. Lee: As the hon. Member will be aware from an answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 10 July 1984 at column 451, commercial confidentiality considerations, including the need to avoid prejudicing contractual negotiations, limit the amount of cost information that can be disclosed. The information in the following table can, however, be supplied. All figures are at 1984-85 outturn prices.

	Unit Production Cost
Challenger MBT (fully equipped)	£1·5 million
Airborne VHF radio for ATC use	£1,150
High frequency radio receiver	£52,000
Helicopter borne anti-tank missile (TOW)	£6,000
Personal weapon round (SA 80 ball round)	22 pence
Nimrod MR Mk 2	£12 million
Chinook helicopter	£9 million
Lynx for the army	£3 million
Puma helicopter	£2·5 million
Nuclear-powered fleet submarine	£200 million
Type 22 frigate	£140 million
Hunt class mine countermeasures vessel	£38 million
Castle class offshore patrol vessel	No such vessel is on order
Total Estimated Programme Cost
Challenger MBT (initial cost)	Programme costs in the region of £350 million
JP 233	Of the order of £700 million
ALARM	£300 million
Tornado F2 and GR1	£9,743 million
EH 101	£1,380 million
Hawk trainer aircraft	£306 million

Greenham Common

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the lights inside the base at Greenham common were extinguished for a period of time on the evening of Wednesday 10 April.

Mr. Stanley: There were a number of failures of different sections of the temporary perimeter lighting system at RAF Greenham common at various times on the night of 10 April. On each occasion it was found that the circuit had been broken by the automatic activation of tripping (circuit breaking) devices designed to avoid overload.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the increasing number of people who have left his Department for positions in industry between 1980 and 1984; and if he is taking steps to ensure the integrity of his Department's contracting procedure in the light of this outflow.

Mr. Lee: Applications under the business appointments rules for each of the years in question were:

Year	Number
1980	141
1981	206
1982	400
1983	541
1984	680

Guidelines for the acceptance of appointments in industry, which are laid down by the Management and Personnel Office, are designed to prevent impropriety occurring in any form, including Ministry of Defence contracting procedures. The views of the Directors of Defence Contracts are invariably taken into account on any proposed appointments. I am satisfied that these procedures are appropriate to handle any suspicion of impropriety and unfair competition.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the conditions imposed on his Department's personnel who leave for positions in industry.

Mr. Lee: The guidelines under which members of my Department, either military or civilian, are required to seek approval for the acceptance of an appointment in industry are laid down centrally by the Management and Personnel Office.

Any individual proposing to accept an appointment with a company in either a contractual or financial relationship with the Ministry of Defence must submit a formal application for permission to do so. For the grade of under-secretary, major general and equivalent and upwards an application is required in respect of any appointment, regardless of its nature.

The Department forms a view as to whether the appointment might be a source of potential criticism on the basis of contractual involvement or as a result of other companies' commercially sensitive information.

The Department may withhold its approval of an application for a period of up to two years.

Major Projects

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the statement on the defence estimates the cost of major projects under research and the criteria for selection of major projects.

Mr. Lee: I intend, as hitherto, to include in SDE 85 a table showing the estimated programme costs of some of the major equipment projects that entered development in the previous year. For the purpose of this table a major project has been defined as one with an estimated cost in excess of £100 million.

Nuclear Systems (Contracts)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage, in value, of his Department's contracts for nuclear or nuclear-capable systems made during the period 1974 to 1984 were on a cost plus basis.

Mr. Lee: Records are not kept in a form that would enable the question to be answered without disproportionate time and effort. It is our aim to introduce incentive arrangements when pricing contracts placed on a non-competitive basis and in this respect our approach to the pricing of contracts for nuclear or nuclear capable systems is the same as for contracts generally.

RAF Trainer Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 17 April, Official Report, column 210, if he will indicate the precise means by which and the dates on which each of the relevant companies in tendering for the new Royal Air Force trainer aircraft was notified of (a) the 31 January 1985 deadline for offers and (b) the 14 March 1985 deadline for subsequent negotiations related to the most attractive bids from Shorts and British Aerospace.

Mr. Lee: They were notified of (a) by telex on 18 January and of (b) orally, at director level, on 13 March.

NATO Budget

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the proportion of its individual defence budget which each member country of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allocates to the total NATO budget.

Mr. Stanley: It is estimated that about 95 per cent. of the United Kingdom's defence budget is devoted directly or indirectly to Alliance tasks. I regret that comparable figures for other NATO nations are not available.

Departmental Grants

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the organisations to which his Department makes grants in aid.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the full list of grants in aid payable by the Ministry of Defence which appears in Vote 1, section K of the defence Estimates, 1985-86.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current cost of transporting troops to the Falkland Islands; and under what section of the Government's White Paper on expenditure, Cmnd 9428, it is accounted for;

(2) what savings will accrue in the cost of transporting troops to the Falkland Islands from the completion of the runway at Mount Pleasant; and when such savings will begin.

Mr. Stanley: [pursuant to his reply, 17 April 1985, c. 211]: The current cost of the movement of passengers and priority freight by air and sea to the Falkland Islands is, including defence contractors personnel, some £64 million a year. It is not possible to separate the cost of moving military personnel and freight from that of civilian personnel and freight. Such movement expenditure is reflected in table 3.1.1 in the Defence Chapter (3.1) of Cmnd 9428. This cost is currently estimated to fall by at least £25 million over the year beginning next month with the introduction of wide-bodied aircraft to Mount Pleasant airport, which will permit the withdrawal of the passenger ships operating between Ascension Island and the Falkland Islands and a reduction in the number of Hercules airbridge flights to Port Stanley airfield.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 23 April 1985

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Grass Carp

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations are in force to control the introduction and use of Grass Carp; whether Grass Carp (Clenopharyngodon idellus), have been subject to his scientific department's attention before being released into British waters; if he will list the waters in which they have been introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Milk (Outgoers Scheme)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has made of the amount which will fall to be paid to farmers seeking payments under the outgoers scheme under which agreement is secured that milk will not be produced; how many applications have been received for payments under this scheme; and what acreage and what number of cows he estimates will be affected by the applications likely to be approved;

(2) if any record is maintained by his Department of the use to which farmers put land in respect of which payments have been made under the outgoers scheme relating to cessation of milk production; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if any savings will be made in the expenditure of the common agricultural policy in circumstances where farmers compensated under the outgoers scheme relating to the cessation of milk production use the land in question for the production of beef; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the percentage increase or decrease in the intervention stocks of the European Economic Community, both in public and private stores, over the past 12 months in the particular cases of cereals, butter, powdered milk, beef and sugar, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Export Rebates

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total sum expended by the European Economic Community in providing export rebates to subsidise the export of cereals, butter, powdered milk, beef and sugar, respectively, in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and by what percentage these totals exceed or were less than the comparable individual totals in the previous 12 months.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Nicholls asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has received of attempts to transfer milk quotas by means of artificial land transactions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have seen press reports of such transactions. I believe the incidence is in fact low, but any artificial transition would be open to challenge in the courts and if ruled illegal could result in heavy costs for those involved. I am arranging for transfers of quota to be monitored to ensure that the requirements of Community and United Kingdom legislation are being observed. In particular, checks will be carried out to ensure that where quota has been transferred in connection with a sale or lease of land, and the land is subsequently returned to the original occupier without the quota, there has been a change in the use of the land in the meantime. If there has been no such change, the quota will be transferred back to the holding from which it came. My Department issued guidance as to the circumstances in which quota can properly be transferred between producers in the paper "Mobility of Quota" issued in January. In order to establish that a change in use of the land has occurred a reasonable interval of time must elapse between the two transactions.

TRANSPORT

National Bike Week

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport what contribution his Department is making towards National Bike Week in May.

Mrs. Chalker: The National Bike Week is an independently sponsored event. We have sent good wishes to the organisers for its success, and will continue to make good progress on cycling schemes in different parts of the country.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of incidents in each of the last 25 years in which fishing vessels suffered damage, either to the vessel itself or to equipment, and where subsequent inquiries suggested that the damage may have resulted from the action of submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information about the type of damage sustained by fishing vessels or their gear is not stored in the Department's casualty statistical data and could be extracted from such detailed records as now exist only with disproportionate staff effort and cost. The statistics published annually by the Department mentioned unusual causes of loss but there is no reference to any fishing vessel loss in this period which resulted from the action of submarines.

Bypasses (Signs)

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the outcome of the consultation he has recently undertaken with regard to local services signs for bypassed communities.

Mrs. Chalker: I am pleased to say that our proposals for new signs for local services in bypassed communities were generally welcomed by the organisations consulted. Consequently the new signs, which will have white lettering and symbols on a dark brown background and may also include a brief descriptive phrase to indicate the tourist attractions to the town or village, can now be used at places in England which meet the qulifying criteria. Until such time as the signs are prescribed in the traffic signs regulations and general directions they will require authorisation by my Department.

ENVIRONMENT

Home Improvement

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet about to announce the date of issue of a consultation document on the Government's private sector home improvement policy.

Sir George Young: We are planning to publish the consultation document early next month.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire on 1 April, Official Report, column 516, whether higher priority is given to determining appeals by public inquiry rather than by written representations.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. The number and proportion of planning appeals determined after a public inquiry and by written representations between 1979 and 1984 is as follows:

Year	Determined by Secretary of State				Determined by Inspectors
	Inquiries		Written representations		Inquiries incl. informal hearings		Written representations
		Per cent.		Per cent.		Per cent.		Per cent.
1979	861	9·6	642	7·2	1,739	19·5	5,692	63·7
1980	845	6·4	676	5·1	1,941	14·8	9,668	73·7
1981	919	6·4	867	6·0	1,994	13·8	10,671	73·8
1982	596	4·6	504	3·9	2,127	16·5	9,688	75·0
1983	370	3·3	279	2·5	1,887	16·9	8,629	77·3
1984	253	2·2	227	2·0	1,298	11·4	9,566	84·4

Birmingham Convention Centre

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any public funds or European Economic Community loans and grants have been used for the construction of the Birmingham convention centre.

Sir George Young: The costs incurred to date in preparing feasibility and other technical studies for an international convention centre in Birmingham have been met wholly from Birmingham city council's own resources.

Swans (Lead Shot)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ascertain why shooters' shot does less damage if ingested by swans than anglers split lead shot; whether his group of specialists from the Nature Conservancy Council and the national angling bodies will consider this in their report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Lead gunshot and anglers' split leadshot are equally toxic. However, post-mortem examinations of swans between 1973 and 1981 revealed that gunshot was present in less than 2 per cent. of cases, whereas anglers split leadshot was found in 58 per cent. of swans examined. Research since 1981 indicates similar results. Of 392 post-mortem examinations of swans where lead weights were identifiable to source, only 6 (1·5 per cent.) contained gunshot. I shall be considering very carefully indeed this whole question in the light of the Nature Conservancy Council's advice.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much additional money will be made available to finance his new joint action plan for the inner cities.

Sir George Young: The city action teams will work within the existing policies and resources of the Departments of Environment, Trade and Industry and Employment/Manpower Services Commission, to enhance the effectiveness of Government programmes in the partnership areas. In 1984-85 £270 million was spent in these areas on the urban programme, the main employment and training schemes, and Government support to industry. In 1985-86 the areas will benefit from the expansion of MSC programmes announced in the budget, and from the extension of regional industrial assistance to the Partnership areas of Manchester/Salford and Birmingham. Details of the city action teams and the programmes with which they will be concerned are in the Library of the House.

Economic Summit

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution he is making to preparations for discussing environmental questions at the economic summit on 2 to 4 May.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Under the title "The Way Forward" I have today published the conclusions of an informal meeting I chaired in London on 17 December 1984 with Environment Ministers of Summit countries.

We considered a wide range of international issues and put forward recommendations for future action. While we recognise the urgent priorities facing each of the nations represented, we also addressed a broader view of emerging environmental issues which are developing on a world scale and which can be expected to post problems over the next decades. With the recent disaster at Bhopal very much in our minds we were particularly concerned with the risks that can attend the transfer of technology or of hazardous chemicals to developing countries. We agreed also that as developed countries we need to intensify co-operation both bilaterally and in the various international bodies of which we are members, notably the OECD, if we are to solve the environmental problems confronting the world.

I am confident that the conclusions of the meeting will be of wide interest to everyone who is concerned with deciding clear priorities for safeguarding our environment. Perhaps the most important single message is the emphasis that we placed on the indivisibility of environmental and economic policies.

"The Way Forward" will be presented to Heads of State or Government as background to their environmental discussions at the Bonn economic summit. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the summary report of the independent review of Ordnance Survey trading accounts will be published.

Mr. Waldegrave: In January last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced that the annual trading accounts for the Ordnance Survey, including statements on revenue and expenditure by main product groups, would be published, and the basis of these accounts would be independently reviewed by commercial accountants to ensure that there is no cross subsidisation of Ordnance Survey's commercial activities from its Exchequer Vote. Peat Marwick management consultants were appointed in June 1984 and they reported recently. An executive summary of their report has been placed in the Library today and copies are available from Ordnance Survey.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Ronald Mackenzie

Mr. Gourlay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the Whitley Council received the appeal of Mr. Ronald Mackenzie against the decision of the Fife health board to terminate his contract of employment; when the Whitley Council appeals procedure will commence; and what is the reason for the delay in dealing with the appeal.

Mr. Younger: The management side secretary of the Scottish appeals committee of the general Whitley council has informed me that notice of the appeal was received on 18 February 1985 and that the submission of the statements of case by the respective sides to the appeal was completed on 25 March 1985. I understand that the statements of case raise the question of whether the appeal is within the competence of the Scottish appeals committee and this question is now the subject of correspondence between the management side secretary and the staff side secretary of the Whitley council concerned. If the question of appealability cannot be resolved between the two secretaries then, following the agreed Whitley procedures, it would be referred to the full council.

Elm Bark Beetle

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to draw to the attention of the Forestry Commission the presence of the east European elm bark beetle, Scolytus laevis, in southern Scotland and north-east England; what assessment he has made of the threat that this beetle poses to the population of Wych elms which had previously been little affected by Dutch elm disease and what measures he is taking to combat this.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission is aware of all the current information on Scolytus laevis which is widespread in northern Britain and has probably been present for many years.

Its potential role as a vector of Dutch elm disease is being investigated by entomologists at the University of Salford. The adult beetles hve been shown to carry the spores of the fungus causing Dutch elm disease to both English and Wych elm trees, but they seem to carry fewer spores than Scolytus scolytus, the larger species of bark beetle which was responsible for the rapid spread of the disease in the 1970s.

Measures are taken under the Dutch Elm Disease (Local Authorities) order 1984 and the Dutch Elm Disease (Restriction on Movement of Elms) Order 1984 to combat the spread of the disease, but there are no known methods of controlling the beetle vectors.

Scottish Tourist Board

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details on the spending moratorium which has been placed on the Scottish tourist board in relation to tourism projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The moratorium on grant approvals, which was imposed last October as a result of the exceptionally heavy demand for investment assistance from the Scottish tourist board during 1983-84, was lifted earlier this month. The board has now resumed exercise of its power to give selective financial assistance to tourist projects.

Deprived Areas

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for initiatives in inner cities and areas of deprivation in Scotland similar to the initiative by the Secretary of State for the Environment in the inner cities in England.

Mr. Ancram: In Scotland, the role assigned to the Scottish Development Agency in relation to economic and environmental action in areas of deprivation, together with the breadth of the responsibilities of the Secretary of State, make additional co-ordinating arrangements similar to those introduced in England unnecessary. My right hon. Friend and I however naturally keep in continuous touch with developments in England, in order to benefit from any lessons which may be derived from experience there.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will deposit in the Library all studies on areas of deprivation prepared by his Department from their evaluation of the 1981 census.

Mr. Ancram: The only such report so far available is the paper "Areas of Special Need in Scotland", published by the Scottish Office Central Research Unit in October 1984, copies of which are in the Library. Any further reports will similarly be placed in the Library.

Retail Stores (Rates)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to initiate a review of the revaluation criteria for retail stores.

Mr. Younger: Local taxation paid by businesses—including retailers—is a subject included in the studies of the local government finance system announced last October, with which my hon. Friend the Minister for Home Affairs and the Environment is closely associated.

PRIME MINISTER

"Better Schools"

Q30. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the White Paper, "Better Schools"; and what developments have taken place in this area since the statement of Government policy in 1972.

The Prime Minister: As "Better Schools" shows, since 1972 there have been substantial advances in the school system. For example, the overall pupil to teacher ratio in maintained primary and secondary schools in England and Wales has improved from 21·5 in 1972 to 17·9 in 1984; and school provision for the under-fives now extends to 43 per cent. of three and four-year-olds compared with 21 per cent. in 1972. But "Better Schools" also shows the need for further action to raise the standards attained by pupils. To this end, it sets out policies in four important areas: the curriculum; examinations, assessment and the recording of achievement; the professional effectiveness, training and management of the teaching force; and school government and the contribution of parents. I believe that the Government's policies will be welcomed by all who are genuinely concerned with improving the standards in our schools.

President Belaunde Terry (Press Conference)

Q62. Mr. Dafyell asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 293, about the press conference held in Lima by President Belaunde Terry on 2 May 1982, how many and what other reports of this press conference were received by Her Majesty's Government and at what time and what dates.

The Prime Minister: The timings of President Belaunde's press conference and of the despatch and receipt in London of Her Majesty's ambassador's report of it have been explained many times. I have nothing to add to the information I gave the hon. Gentleman in the answer to which he refers.

Gibraltar

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Prime Minister if she will now set in motion actions to enable the franchise to be given to the people of Gibraltar for European parliamentary elections.

The Prime Minister: There are constitutional and practical difficulties in the way of direct Gibraltarian representation in the European Parliament, notably Gibraltar's status as a dependent territory. The issue has been carefully considered on a number of occasions but this Government, like their predecessors, take the view that Gibraltar's interests are well served by the present arrangements.

Export Promotion Services

Mr. Garrett asked the Prime Minister how much was spent and how many people were employed on export promotion services by each of (a) the British Overseas Trade Board, (b) commercial attachés in United Kingdom embassies abroad, (c) the Export Credits Guarantee Department and (d) the Overseas Development Administration, in 1983-84 and 1984-85; what are the projected figures for 1985-86; how the relative priority accorded to these areas of expenditure is determined; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Export promotion services, under the guidance of the British Overseas Trade Board, are provided by the Department of Trade and Industry. The information requested is set out in the following table. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not incur direct expenditure on export promotion services. The table shows the overseas commercial staff involved in the export promotion programme.

The Export Credits Guarantee Department does not employ staff on export promotion services as such. However the entire Department has the statutory function of encouraging trade with other countries, which it does by giving guarantees of payment to exporters and by supporting the banks in making available finance for exports. The Overseas Development Administration has no export promotion services. However ODA staff work with the Department of Trade and Industry and the diplomatic service overseas posts in assisting United Kingdom firms to derive the maximum benefit from commercial opportunites under the aid programme. No separate expenditure or staff are allocated for this purpose. There is close consultation between my right hon. Friends and their respective Departments (the DTI and FCO) on the level and distribution of diplomatic service commercial staff overseas in relation to DTI manpower and direct expenditure on export promotion.

Net expenditure and staff for export promotion services

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86*
DTI Vote (BOTB) net expenditure £M	†22·2	27·5	‡27·9
DTI Export promotion manpower	913	818	‖748
FCO overseas commercial staff manpower	1,180	1,159	¶1,132

* Figures for 1983-84 are actuals, figures for 1984-85 are actuals for manpower and budget figures for expenditure, and figures for 1985-86 are budget figures in each case.

† Excludes publicity and publications expenditure which until 1984-85 appeared on the Central Office of Information vote. The figure is therefore not directly comparable with later years.

‡ Includes adjustment for receipts taken in from another heading; the figure comparable to 1984-85 is £27·7M.

‖ The figures are based on an estimate of the time spent by some staff on other work such as trade policy and trade relations. They include regional office staff. Because of the organisational changes in the period there are variations which mean that the figures are not completely comparable.

¶ These figures include all FCO commercial staff overseas including locally engaged staff and all support staff. It is not possible to establish the significant proportion of the time of these staff spent on matters other than export promotion, such as inward investment, trade relations, and economic matters.

Engagements

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 23 April.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 April.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 April.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today including one with President Rene of the Seychelles.

Australian Royal Commission

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she has received any requests from individuals and groups not to release documents to the Australian Royal Commission; and if she will make a statement

The Prime Minister: No.

Technology, Growth and Employment Working Group

Mrs. Peacock asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress made by the technology, growth and employment working group in considering the environmental matters referred to it by the London economic summit.

The Prime Minister: The technology, growth and employment working group, chaired by my Chief Scientific Adviser, Sir Robin Nicholson, completed its report on the environment as requested by the end of December 1984. This report will be considered in the context of the economic summit to be held in Bonn this May, and I have today placed a copy of the report (Cmnd. 9500) in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Custody Statistics

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men, (b) women and (c) juveniles in custody in police cells on each day in 1985 by location.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is as follows: figures are not separately recorded for juveniles but I am not aware that there were any such cases.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in Brixton have attempted to commit suicide in each of the last six years; how many attempts succeeded; and how many other deaths there were apart from those due to natural causes.

Mr. Mellor: Inquest verdicts, other than natural causes were as follows:

Year	Suicide	Open Verdict
1979	4	0
1980	5	0
1981	3	0
1982	1	1
1983	4	2

Inquest verdicts on one death in 1984 and two in 1985 are still awaited. However we have no reason to believe that these were not due to natural causes.

There were nine incidents of non-fatal self injury with apparent suicidal intent in 1983. Figures for other years are not available.

Police Patrol Vehicles

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the annual cost of equipping police motorway patrol cars.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A total annual figure is not held centrally. The annual cost of equipping a single police motorway patrol vehicle is estimated to be between £850 and £2,200, including modification, installation and maintenance costs, depending on the type of vehicle and its intended use.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will now make a statement on the progress of work by his Department on the design of a new car pod system of equipping police cars;

(2) what estimate he has made of the likely savings from equipping police cars with the car pod system.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Work on the development of a "carpod" or container which could be mounted on the roof of a vehicle and hold all its communications and electrical equipment has been under way for several years, but a prototype which meets the operational requirements cost-effectively has yet to be produced. Further work will be undertaken as resources permit. The use of a carpod should reduce the cost of equipping a police vehicle, but any such saving would be at least partially offset by the cost of the carpod itself as well as any consequent reduction in the petrol and speed efficiency of the vehicle.

Demonstrations

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will have discussions with chief constables concerning methods of protecting persons peacefully taking part in demonstrations from violent assault by gangs.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is already the usual practice for the police to discuss with the organisers of a demonstration the plans for the event. If the organisers fear that an otherwise peaceful demonstration is likely to be violently disrupted, they can raise this with the police so that appropriate precautions can be taken.

Prisons (Mailbags)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of men employed on mail-bag work in prisons in England and Wales on 31 March.

Mr. Brittan: The most recent information relates to 30 November 1984, when 1,728 men were employed on mailbag production in prisons in England and Wales.

Greenham Common (Incident)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Thames valley police authority on the incident which took place at Greenham Common on Wednesday 10 April; and what was the number of people involved, the number injured and the number arrested.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Thames valley informs me that at 11.30 pm on 10 April two women were injured by two assailants outside RAF Greenham Common. No one has been arrested in connection with the incident but police inquiries are continuing.

Alcoholic Beverages

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current limit on the level of minimum sale of units of alcoholic beverages before an off-licence is not required; if he has any plans to seek to increase this minimum limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: I assume that my hon. Friend's question relates to the application of the Licensing Act 1964 to the sale of alcohol by retail, and to the minimum quantities of alcohol that may be sold without a justices' licence. Under section 4(4) of the Alcoholic Liquor Duties Act 1979, selling by retail means the sale at any one time to any one person of quantities not exceeding:

in the case of spirits, wine or made-wine, 9 litres or 1 case, and in the case of beer or cider, 21 litres or 2 cases.

There are at present no plans to increase these limits.

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps Her Majesty's Government take to monitor the activities of wholesalers of alcoholic beverages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: No records are kept on the activities of wholesalers of alcoholic liquor.

Winson Green Prison

Sir Reginald Eyre asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what improved arrangements will be made at Winson Green prison, Birmingham, for solicitors to conduct private interviews with prisoners awaiting trial.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 28 March 1985, c. 281]: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State has written to my hon. Friend today. I will arrange to place a copy of his reply in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Imports

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for footwear, clothing and the principal divisions of the textile industry the ratio of imports to home demand in 1975 and at the latest available date for the EEC and non-EEC countries, together with the relevant import figures.

Mr. Channon: The information is given in the table:

Productivity

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what weight he gives to international comparisons in relative rates of productivity in determining the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Channon: International competitiveness depends on many factors such as productivity, labour costs, the price of raw materials, profit margins and exchange rate movements, as well as such non-price elements as delivery performance and after-sales service. All of these are important in determining the extent to which British producers can compete in world markets.

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the most recent figures for relative rates of productivity in Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

Chemicals

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implications of the declining export surplus of United Kingdom chemicals; and if he will allocate more Government resources to United Kingdom export promotion agencies in respect of this sector of industry.

Mr. Trippier: From 1981 to 1983 there were successive small reductions in the substantial trade surplus of the United Kingdom chemical industry at current prices but this trend was reversed in 1984. The Department's export promotion services, under the guidance of the British Overseas Trade Board, are open equally to all manufacturing and services sectors. Where particular important export opportunities are identified, the Department and diplomatic service posts overseas work with the industry to help exploit them. The current programme for export of specialised chemicals to Latin America is a recent example.

Investment Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for (a) the world and (b) the European Economic Community the amount of inward and outward investment in banking, insurance and so on for each year since 1972.

Mr. Trippier: The available information is published in "Business Monitor MA4", table 3.3 in respect of outward investment and table 4.3 in respect of inward investment. The editions for 1975, 1980 and 1982 are relevant.

Figures for banking, insurance and so on are included under "other activities".

Clothing (Imports)

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of articles of apparel and clothing accessories imported from Italy, Romania, Taiwan, Hong Kong and South Korea, respectively, in 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

UK imports of apparel and clothing accessories

	Value £ million (cif)
	1983	*1984
Italy	183	237
Romania	12	13
Taiwan	52	59

South Korea	114	146

Double Glazing

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to make the double glazing provisions of BS 6262 mandatory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The Department is not satisfied the BS 6262 is adequate in all respects. This view is shared by the Department of Environment, which is responsible for the Building Regulations, and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents. For example, the standard does not require safety glass to be used in large low level areas vulnerable to breakage by children. Officials from this Department and the Department of Environment are participating in the current review of the Standard in order to tighten up on these aspects.

Once an acceptable standard is available, consideration will be given to the steps that are necessary to make sure that it is observed as widely as possible. As far as replacement glass and glazing sold to the public is concerned, it is likely that approval of the standard for the purposes of the general safety duty proposed in the White Paper on the Safety of Goods (Cmnd. 9302) will be sufficient. Approval under such a duty will, we believe, prove more flexible than regulations which tend to inhibit innovation.

Whatever steps are taken, there will be no dramatic fall in the number of accidents. Any reduction will be gradual uptil the glazing in the present housing stock is replaced.

Estate Agents Act 1979

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the average length of time taken by investigations leading to banning orders under the Estate Agents Act 1979;

(2) how many banning orders have been made under the Estate Agents Act 1979 in each year since the Act came into effect.

Mr. Fletcher: These are matters for the Director General of Fair Trading. I have been in touch with him and he will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the operation of the Estate Agents Act 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: Yes, but I will continue to keep a close watch on the working of the Act.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now implement sections 16 and 17 of the Estate Agents Act 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: No. I do not consider that there is any urgent need to implement these sections, but I will continue to keep the situation under review.

Works of Art (Export Licences)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licences for works of art were granted in each of the last five years.

Mr. Channon: The number of licences issued in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1980	3,691
1981	4,054
1982	4,055
1983	4,866
1984	6,298

Consumer Durables (Exports)

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make available additional resources for the promotion of exports of consumer durable goods.

Mr. Channon: My Department's export promotion services, under the guidance of the British Overseas Trade Board, are open equally to all manufacturing and services sectors. Where particularly important export opportunities are identified the Department, and the diplomatic service posts overseas, work with the industry to help exploit them. The task force for security equipment in France and Spain is a recent example.

EC (Clothing Imports)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the Romanian quota for exporting ladies' dresses, European Economic Community category 26, to each European Economic Community country in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: Romanian quotas for ladies' dresses (MFA category 26) to each member state in each year since 1979 are as follows (in '000s of pieces):

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the Romanian quota for exporting ladies' blouses, European Economic Community category 7, to each European Economic Community country in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: Romanian quotas for ladies' blouses (MFA category 7) to each member state in each year since 1979 are as follows (in '000s of pieces):

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the United Kingdom quota for importing ladies' blouses, European Economic Community category 7, from Hong Kong, South Korea, Taiwan, India and the Philippines in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: The United Kingdom quotas for ladies' blouses (MFA category 7) from Hong Kong, South Korea, Taiwan, India and the Philippines in each year since 1979 are as follows (in '000s of pieces):

	Hong Kong	South Korea	Taiwan	India	Philippines

1985	7,358	2,968	277	11,679	596

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the United Kingdom quota for importing ladies' dresses, European Economic Community category 26, from Hong Kong, South Korea, Taiwan, India and the Philippines in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: The United Kingdom's quotas for ladies' dresses (MFA category 26) from Hong Kong, South Korea, Taiwan, India and the Philippines in each year since 1979 are as follows (in '000s of pieces):

	Hong Kong	South Korea	Taiwan	India	Philippines

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the value of articles of apparel and clothing accessories imported into the European Economic Community from Romania, Taiwan, Hong Kong, South Korea, India and the Philippines in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: Data for 1984 are not yet readily available. The data for the other years are in the table:

*European Community imports of articles of apparel and clothing accessories

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of articles of apparel and clothing accessories imported into the United Kingdom from Romania, Taiwan, Hong Kong, South Korea, India and the Philippines in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

Clothing Manufactures

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has to the number of ladies' blouses, European Economic Community category 7, manufactured in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: United Kingdom production of ladies' blouses (MFA category 7) in each year since 1979 is as follows:

	Thousands of pieces
1979	30,221
1980	26,149
1981	24,313
1982	25,506
1983	26,483
1984	27,678

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the number of ladies' dresses European Economic Community category 26, manufactured in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: United Kingdom production of ladies' dresses (MFA category 26) in each year since 1979 is as follows:

	Thousands of pieces
1979	44,014
1980	43,616
1981	39,405
1982	35,845
1983	34,671
1984	35,361

Romania

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the total value of United Kingdom exports to Romania in each year since 1979;

(2) what was the total value of Romanian exports to the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to which United Kingdom companies, or multi-national companies with United Kingdom bases, export currently to Romania.

Mr. Channon: Many leading United Kingdom companies, including subsidiaries of multinationals, export currently to Romania. The main sectors include aircraft parts, chemicals, power-generating machinery, scientific instruments, textile yarns and clothing. A representative cross-section of exporting companies (Shell, Rank Xerox, Ingersoll-Rand, Brittain Engineering, National Smokeless Fuels, Deeside International Trade) was present at the Anglo-Romanian joint commission held in London last week and several other leading exporting companies had individual meetings with the Romanian delegation.

Matthew Brown plc

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the proposed takeover of Matthew Brown plc by Scottish and Newcastle Breweries.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 22 April 1985, c. 336]: In accordance with usual practice, details of representations regarding mergers are confidential. I am therefore unable to release any information about them.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Peat Industry

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the peat industry in the Province.

Dr. Boyson: I regard the peat industry as having the potential to make an increasing contribution to the economy of the Province. The Local Enterprise Development Unit, has identified it as a sector for growth and has recently held a major exhibition to draw attention to the opportunities which exist for developing this natural resource. LEDU has in the past two years assisted over 20 projects involving the extraction and processing of peat and will continue to provide assistance to those with viable proposals to establish or expand such operations.

Benefits (Automatic Credit Transfer)

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the impact of the Government's plan to encourage payment of social security benefits by automatic credit transfer rather than through local post offices in Northern Ireland; how many of those entitled to such payments in Northern Ireland have opted for automatic credit transfer; and what percentage this represents.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since the introduction of the facility to pay retirement pensions, widows benefits and child benefit by automated credit transfer, 20,283 beneficiaries have opted for payment by this method; this represents 4·7 per cent. of those entitled to such payments.

EMPLOYMENT

Young Persons

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the staff in the local offices of his Department in Knowsley are advising young people to leave home to find work.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Where a suitable specific job opportunity exists beyond daily travelling distance, jobcentre staff in offices serving the Knowsley area may advise a young person to consider the possibility of a move away from home to take it. This accords with practice throughout the employment service.

Labour Statistics

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of economically active women between the ages of 16 and 60 years are in work (a) full-time and (b) part-time for each region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information is from the 1983 Labour Force Survey, as follows:

	Percentage of economically active women aged 16-59 years
	In full-time employment	In part-time employment	All in employment*
United Kingdom	51·0	37·2	88·9
North	47·1	40·0	87·5

Scotland	51·9	34·3	86·9
Northern Ireland	55·9	30·1	86·3

* Includes those with hours of work not stated.

Leicester

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are available for work in the Leicester travel-to-work area at the latest date for which figures are available; and how this compares with the figures for the same geographical area one, two and three years previously.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The number of unemployed claimants in the Leicester travel-to-work area in March 1985 was 27,897 and in March 1984 27,410. Figures for the same geographical area for March 1983 and March 1982 are not available.

Community Programme

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the decision that persons not in receipt of state benefits should have a low priority for participation in the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I keep under close review the characteristics of those entering and participating in the community programme but I have no plans to change the present eligibility criteria.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has concerning the numbers of individuals who would otherwise be entitled to participate in the community programme, but who are prevented from doing so because they are not in receipt of state benefits.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 9 November 1984 at columns 27-28.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of individuals currently taking part in the community programme who were formerly in receipt of supplementary benefit; and in each case what percentage of the total regional participants in the programme this figure represents.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested. Information on the percentage of entrants in each region who were previously in receipt of unemployment or supplementary benefit is set out in the table:

Region	Percentage of entrants in receipt of benefit in last 12 months to 29 March 1985 Per cent.
London	87·9
South East	88·4
South West	92·9

Y/H	91·0
Great Britain	91·0

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of males and females currently taking part in the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested. Information on the percentages of males and females entering the programme in each region is set out in the table:

Percentage of males and females entering the programme in the last 12 months to 29 March 1985

Youth Training

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training scheme mode B schemes are supported entirely or in part by local authorities.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission's census of youth training schemes, conducted in October 1983, showed 485 schemes were run by local authorities. In addition, there will have been other schemes which received varying degrees of support from local authorities.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training scheme mode A scheme places are currently filled by ex-offenders.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This information is not available.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many spare youth training scheme mode A places are open to ex-offenders.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The youth training scheme is open equally to all eligible young people and the Manpower Services Commission does not reserve unfilled places for any particular group of youngsters.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training scheme places have (a) been filled and (b) remain vacant in Hampshire and in the Portsmouth, South area, at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At the end of March 1985, 6,200 youth training scheme places were filled in Hampshire, of which 1,116 were in the Portsmouth local authority district. At the same date a further 3,659 places in Hampshire, including 506 in Portsmouth had been approved but were not filled. Not all these places may, however, have been available for occupation.

Special Employment and Training

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people benefiting from special employment and training measures at the latest available date in the constituency of Portsmouth, South or in the geographical areas which correspond most closely with that constituency; and what is the average cost per person supported under each measure.

Mr. Alan Clark: Some 4,300, although because of the various bases on which local information is collated, an unknown proportion will be in areas outside the hon. Member's constituency. The costs set out as follows are national averages based on the latest information and estimates and where appropriate include assumptions about periods of participation on schemes and the number of supervisors employed. They do not take into account savings in the payments of benefits or flow-backs to the Exchequer from tax and national insurance. The cost in any particular area for a particular scheme may vary from the national average.

Measure	Estimated Average Gross cost per person supported under the Measures £
Community Industry	2,370
Community Programme	4,290
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	1,964
Job Release Schemes	3,250
Job Splitting Scheme	750
Young Workers Scheme	560
Youth Training Scheme	2,370

SOCIAL SERVICES

Human Embryos

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the establishments in which he is aware of human embryos being currently possessed for purposes which would be outside the terms of the authority defined in the Unborn Children (Protection) Bill, specifying, in each case, the nature of any projects involved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have sufficient detailed information to enable us to speculate on the effects of the Bill as precisely as the question asks.

If the Bill is enacted, it will be for those who may be affected to consider whether their present or intended activities will still be lawful.

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the following figures as at the November 1984 benefit upratings (a) the tax-free income per week available from the married man's tax allowance and child benefit for a married couple with two children under 11 years of age, (b) the supplementary benefit requirements figure for a married man with two children aged between four and six years, (c) the prescribed amount for family income supplement for a married man with two children, in the manner of his answer to the hon. Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) on 2 December 1983, Official Report, columns 649-50.

Mr. Whitney: I assume the hon. Member has in mind the reply to the hon. Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) on 2 December 1983, at columns 657-58.

The information is as follows:

(a) £74·37* (including child benefit of £6·85 for each child).
(b) £66·85†.
(c) £100·00.

Notes:

* The tax allowance element has been calculated as 1/52 of the married man's tax allowance of £3,155.

† Supplementary benefit requirements (excluding housing costs) are the ordinary scale rates of £64·75 and, assuming one child to be under five, a heating addition of £2·10.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the savings in a full financial year if housing benefit claims were only met up to (a) 80 per cent., (b) 85 per cent., (c) 90 per cent. and (d) 95 per cent. of housing costs.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to announce the annual uprating in child benefit.

Mr. Whitney: An announcement about the rate of child benefit will be made at the usual time in June.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons in receipt of unemployment benefit have been (a) unemployed for six months or less and (b) unemployed for six months to one year.

Mr. Whitney: At November 1983 (the latest date for which figures are available) there were 589,700 persons in receipt of unemployment benefit who had been unemployed for six months or less, and 297,900 who had been unemployed for six months to one year.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons in receipt of unemployment benefit receive supplementary benefit; what is the total cost of supplementary benefit paid to them; and what is the average payment.

Mr. Whitney: The number of unemployed claimants receiving both unemployment and supplementary benefit at December 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, was 207,000, and their average weekly rate of supplementary benefit was £15·66. The total cost of their supplementary benefit in the 1983-84 financial year was £200 million.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the costs of meeting mortgage payments for claimants of supplementary benefit who are (a) unemployed claimants and (b) other claimants in a full financial year; and how many persons benefit.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Figures are held only for the combined figure of mortgage interest and ground rent. The estimated amount of money added into the assessment for mortgage interest and ground rent, together with the number of claimants for 1982, which are the latest figures available, is as follows:

	Number of claimants	£ million
Total number of supplementary beneficiaries in receipt of mortgage interest	235,000	170
Number of those who are unemployed	140,000	123
Other claimants	95,000	47

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been paid so far in 1985 under single payment regulation 28 for help with fuel bills in exceptionally severe weather; and how many households have benefited.

Mr. Whitney: Local social security offices are keeping a tally of the number and cost of supplementary benefit lump sum payments made towards extra fuel used in the recent exceptionally severe weather. They will be asked to make a return when the period during which claims should be made is over. The cost of obtaining an interim return would be disproportionately high.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of (a) the death grant and (b) the maternity grant in the latest full year for which statistics are available; and how many households benefited.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated cost (excluding the cost of administration) in 1984-85 of the death grant and maternity grant is £17 million and £18 million respectively. There were some 600,000 successful claims for death grant and 700,000 for maternity grant in 1984-85.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of (a) additional help with funeral costs and (b) help with maternity benefits for supplementary benefit claimants and low income families in the latest full year for which statistics are available; and how many households benefited.

Mr. Whitney: Information from the "Annual Statistical Enquiry" carried out in December 1982 is as follows :

	*Number of payments	Total expenditure £
Supplementary benefit
Single payments for funeral expenses	13,000	2·6 million
Single payments for maternity needs	101,000	5·4 million

* These figures relate to the number of payments made. Figures are not available as to the number of individual households which benefited. Figures from the Annual Statistical Enquiry relate to single payments made during the 12 months preceding the date of the enquiry to persons still in receipt of supplementary benefit at the time of the enquiry, and do not, therefore, record all the single payments made during the year.

Help under the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulation is only available to low income families if they are in receipt of supplementary benefit, or would be eligible for supplementary benefit if they made a claim.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of raising child benefit from November by (a) 6 per cent. (b) 3 per cent. and (c) 2 per cent. for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Whitney: For the financial year 1985-86 it would cost £70 million, £35 million and £26 million respectively to raise child benefit by 6 per cent., 3 per cent. and 2 per cent. from November 1985. The corresponding costs for the full 1986-87 financial year would be £196 million, £98 million and £74 million respectively.

Cohabitation Rules

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now introduce legislation abolishing the cohabitation rules of his Department, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The term "cohabitation" was replaced in social security legislation by the last Labour Government by the term "living together as husband and wife". We have no plans to abolish the "living together as husband and wife" rules. Successive Governments have all taken the view that such rules are necessary to avoid the unfairness of unmarried couples being entitled to benefits denied to married couples.

Health Authorities (Budgets)

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the populations covered, numbers of staff and authorised budgets for all district health authorities.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect detailed district information in this form centrally. The hon. Member may care to contact the chairman of the regional health authorities in which he is interested in order to obtain it.

Homeless Men (Resettlement)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has that voluntary organisations on Merseyside dealing with homeless men have succeeded in resettling the men.

Mr. Whitney: The process of regional consultation just beginning on the closure of Fazakerly resettlement unit will look at organisations willing to provide alternative resettlement facilities on Merseyside and will ensure that any organisation recommended for funding has the experience and expertise to do the job.

Fazakerley Re-establishment and Resettlement Units

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make an official visit to the Fazakerley re-establishment and resettlement units.

Mr. Newton: I am grateful to the hon. Member for the invitation previously extended to me informally. I will look for an opportunity to visit the unit later in the year.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what use he intends to make of the expertise and experience in dealing with homeless men gained by the staff of Fazakerley resettlement unit when the unit is closed.

Mr. Whitney: Administrative staff employed in the social security regional organisation volunteer for a limited period to perform resettlement unit duties and when the unit is closed they will return to other social security work where their expertise and experience will be useful. Alternative job possibilities are being explored for staff who are employed in grades particular to resettlement units.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to replace the training available to the long-term unemployed provided at Fazakerley re-establishment centre.

Mr. Whitney: The decision to close re-establishment centres was taken in the light of the greatly increased provision for the long-term unemployed now made by the Manpower Services Commission.

Before the closure of Fazakerley re-establishment centre a detailed assessment of the relevant local MSC provision will be undertaken.

Cervical Cancer

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on the basis of what factors the decision was taken by his Department to abolish the national recall scheme for cancer screening for women in 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The major factor behind the decision to abolish the national recall scheme for cervical cancer screening (based at the National Health Service central register) was the low level of effectiveness of that scheme. The Committee on Gynaecological Cytology made some well founded criticisms of the scheme to that affect.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of patients who have died from cervical cancer in each single year since 1979; and what proportion of those were in the west midlands region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of deaths from malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD (9th rev) 1980) in England and Wales and in the west midlands region for 1979 to 1984 inclusive, and the percentages these latter figures represent of all such deaths in England and Wales, are shown in the table.

The estimated population of females aged 25 years and over in the west midlands region is approximately 10 per cent. of the corresponding population of England and Wales for the period concerned.

Number of Deaths from Malignant Neoplasm of Cervix Uteri (a) England and Wales (b) West Midlands Region and percentages, 1979 to 1984

1983	1,959	191	9·75
1984	1,899	213	11·22

Health Expenditure (West Midlands)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the £4 billion which the National Health Service spent on family medical services since 1979 was devoted to the west midlands region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The annual financial accounts of health authorities in England show total expenditure on general medical services in the period 1 April 1978 to 31 March 1984 as £3·86 billion. Expenditure by authorities in the west midlands region was 10·67 per cent. of that total.

Children (Residential Care)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the costs which have been incurred by social services departments in the west midlands region in each year since 1979 for placing children in care into residential care in comparison with foster care costs during the same period.

Mr. John Patten: Information for financial years up to 1983-84, which is the latest available, is given in the following table:

Local authority gross current expenditure on children in care (£ million in cash)

Note: Some part of the residential care expenditure may relate to children who are not in local authority care, but the available information does not separately identify this.

Medical Defence Union

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he next plans to meet representatives of the Medical Defence Union to discuss improvements to the present procedures involved in asking National Health Service patients to attend for follow-up checks.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to do so.

Doctors (Visits)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider recommencing the practice of doctors visiting housebound and elderly patients on a monthly basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The frequency and extent of domiciliary visiting by a general medical practitioner is a matter for his clinical judgment and has always been so.

NHS (Female Employees)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of women in the total work force of the National Health Service ancillary services at the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: At 30 September 1983 74 per cent. of the total number of National Health Service ancillary staff in England were women.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration has been given to issuing an instruction to health authorities to ensure that there are common standards of availability of kidney dialysis; and if he will estimate the current shortfall in this treatment against known need.

Mr. John Patten: In January 1984 my right hon. Friend announced his intention to set targets to ensure that a minimum standard of renal service provision would be achieved in all regions, and each regional health authority has now agreed that new renal patients will be accepted for treatment at an annual rate of not less than 40 per million total population by 1987.

Kidney Donor Cards

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many donor cards issued by his Department are known to have been filled in and to be in circulation.

Mr. John Patten: Over 12½ million new donor cards were issued by the Department during the 12 month period following the launch of the campaign to promote the scheme in February 1984. It is impossible to estimate precisely how many of these cards have been signed and are now being carried by people willing to donate their organs.

Community Health Councils

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in view of the present dependence of community health councils on the regional health authority for both the appointment of their secretaries and the approval and funding of their annual budgets, he will give community health councils some degree of independence by establishing another method for their funding and staffing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I see no need for this.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in view of the fact that community health councils are funded by and have their staff appointed by the regional health authorities, he is satisfied that community health councils are in a position to give independent advice to him on proposed hospital closures or reductions in services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in each of the last three available years he has been provided with the views of a community health council in relation to a proposed hospital closure or reduction in services; and on how many occasions of that total the community health council recommendation has been opposed to that of the regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Proposals for hospital closure or change of use are normally only referred to us after formal consultation if they are opposed by a community health council but supported by the regional health authority. The number of referrals for each of the last three years is as follows:

	Number
1982	3
1983	24
1984	30

No proposal proceeds if the regional health authority refuses to endorse it. There is no general requirement for proposals to be referred to Ministers where the CHC, RHA and district health authority are in agreement. We therefore have no information about cases where RHA and CHC both supported or both opposed a proposal or where the regional health authority alone opposed it.

We do not hold centrally detailed information about representations made by CHCs on alterations to services not involving hospital closure or change of use.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of community health councils for the year 1985-86; and how that cost compares with each of the past five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have made no estimate centrally of the cost of community health councils in 1985-86. The annual accounts of health authorities show the following amounts as their total expenditure on community health councils in the most recent five years for which figures are available:

	£ '000s
1979-80	4,031
1980-81	4,934
1981-82	5,368
1982-83	5,787
1983-84	6,099

Fraud (Investigations)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will name and describe the instructions referred to as 'FIG' in his Department's S manual; and if he will place a copy of these FIG instructions in the Library;

(2) if he will list, name and describe the instructions under which staff of his Department work to investigate cases of suspected fraud by social security claimants.

Mr. Whitney: The instructions and guidance on the investigation of suspected fraud by social security claimants are set out in the fraud investigator's guide. It contains details of departmental policy on fraud and operational instructions and guidance for investigators.

It is not in the public interest to publish the contents of the guide.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of investigations made in the last year by staff of his Department into cases of actual or suspected fraud by social security claimants; if he will estimate what proportion of the files and records of these investigations contain or contained a photograph of the suspected person; and if he will describe how such photographs were obtained by staff of his Department;

(2) if he will describe the nature and extent of files and other records used by staff of his Department in the investigation of actual or suspected fraud by social security claimants; and if he will list the typical items of personal data held in such files and records in respect of the suspected person or other persons.

Mr. Whitney: A file is normally set up when it is decided that a fraud investigation is appropriate. In the period between 8 May 1984 and 12 March 1985 261,302 such files were raised. Typically, the files will contain the name, address, date of birth and national insurance number of the claimants and any other information relevant to the suspected fraud. Claimants are not photographed in connection with these investigations.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in 1984 had cervical smear tests under the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1983, the latest year for which information is available, the number of National Health Service cervical cytology tests performed in England was 3,045,839. The number of tests may not correspond exactly to the number of women tested but we do not hold centrally information the number of women screened.

Wessex Health Region (Expenditure)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the expenditure of the Wessex health region for each year from 1979 to 1984 on current and capital accounts, expressed both in current cash terms and at fixed prices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is given in the following table:

£ million

	Current expenditure		Capital expenditure
Year		*At 1983-84 prices		*At 1983-84 prices
1978-79	223·6	380·8	19·6	33·3
1979-80	271·2	395·3	22·7	33·1
1980-81	349·4	429·3	33·7	41·5

Cyclosporin

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating a transplant heart patient with cyclosporin; what is the average number of years for which such treatment is required; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating a transplant pancreas patient with cyclosporin; what is the average number of years for which such treatment is required; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating a transplant liver patient with cyclosporin; what is the average number of years for which such treatment is required; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating a kidney transplant patient with cyclosporin; what is the average number of years for which such treatment is required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The average duration of treatment with cyclosporin of patients who have received an organ transplant, and the precise annual costs of such treatment, will be dependent on the individual clinical management of the patients concerned. We do not collect and record the detailed relevant information centrally. However, the costs of immunosuppressant treatment have tended to decline over recent years as a result of dosage reductions designed to minimise undesirable side effects. We now estimate that, where cyclosporin is used as the main immunosuppressive agent, the annual costs of treating an adult are in the region of £2,000, reckoned from a date six months after an organ transplant operation has been performed. The costs of immunosuppression are unlikely to vary significantly according to which organ has been transplanted.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what alternatives to the use of cyclosporin as a prophylaxis in the treatment of grafts and transplants have been assessed by the National Health Service and with what results.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Conventional treatment for the prevention of graft rejection is with azathioprine and steroids, and trials are now being undertaken both in this country and elsewhere to assess the best way of using these drugs in combination with cyclosporin so as to maximise the benefit to patients, minimise side effects and reduce costs. Research is being conducted into the development of new immunosuppressive drugs, but we are not aware of any that are yet beyond the experimental stage. Because of high research costs and the relatively small demand for immunosuppressants, it is likely that the benefits of any new developments will be from an improvement in effectiveness and a reduction in side effects rather than from lower costs.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any representations from medical or other authoritative persons about the cost to the National Health Service of the drug cyclosporin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We received representations about the costs of cyclosporin in 1983 from the chairman of the British Transplantation Society and last year from the chairman of the Wessex regional health authority. In our discussions with the drug's manufacturer, Sandoz Products Limited, the company cited continuing high production costs as preventing the possibility of a price reduction but agreed not to increase the price during 1984. We do not control the initial pricing of drugs when launched but subsequent price changes are governed by the extent of the manufacturer's allowed profitability on sales of medicines to the National Health Service under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost per unit dose of cyclosporin.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The list price of cyclosporin is as follows:

Strength mg/ml	Type	Quantity	Price £
50	1 ml ampoule	10	16·24
50	5 ml ampoule	10	77·15
100	Oral solution 50 ml	1	105·00

Prices on contract to hospitals will be somewhat less.

Drug Prices

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list his powers (a) for negotiating drug prices, and (b) where such prices are excessive, to exercise unilateral price reduction; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will seek to renegotiate the price charged to the National Health Service for the drug cyclosporin for use as prophylaxis in the treatment of grafts and transplants.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We exercise control over the price of National Health Services medicines through the non-statutory pharmaceutical price regulation scheme. This operates on the basis that since the Health Departments are effectively monopoly buyers of almost all prescribed medicines sold in the United Kingdom the price of individual products in a company's range is not for practical purposes significant if the overall costs and profits of the company are reasonable. We therefore set a target rate of return for sales of the whole product range of each company. It follows that if the price of cyclosporin is reduced the price of other medicines which the company supplies to the National Health Service might increase provided overall profit did not exceed the amount allowed.

Under section 57 of the National Health Service Act 1977 the Secretary of State may by order provide for controlling maximum prices for medical supplies, including medicines. It has not so far been found necessary to use these powers.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the most expensive drug prescribed under the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: According to records held at the Prescription Pricing Authority the most expensive drug currently dispensed against NHS prescriptions in England is Methotrexate injection, for which the price of a 200 ml vial is £369·15.

Mortality Rates

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the mortality rates per thousand people in each year since 1979 for the United Kingdom, Great Britain, the northern region, Tyne and Wear, South Tyneside and South Shields, respectively.

Mr. John Patten: The available figures are shown in the table. South Shields is part of the metropolitan district of South Tyneside, and rates cannot be provided for sub-divisions of such districts. Mortality rates are not yet available for 1984.

Death rates per thousand people for the United Kingdom, Great Britain, the North Region, Tyne and Wear, and South Tyneside, 1979 to 1983

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983

Population Statistics

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate from "Census 1981" data, the total number of people within the wards constituting (i) the Leicester travel-to-work area, (ii) the Leicester East constituency and (iii) the city of Leicester; and how the figures compare with those from the previous census.

Mr. John Patten: The total number of persons present on census night in 1971 and 1981 were as follows:

	1971	1981
i. Leicester travel-to-work area (1981 boundaries)	509,424	526,428
ii. Leicester East Constituency (1983 boundaries)	86,700	89,739
iii. Leicester County District (1981 boundaries)	284,208	280,324

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the hourly rate of pay for (a) a junior ward sister and (b) a senior ward sister in 1981 within the National Health Service; what were the successive percentage increases in 1982, 1983, and 1984; and what is the current hourly rate for 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following is the information requested for the period 1981 to 1984, based on the minimum and maximum points of the nursing sister II (ward sister) pay scale. In addition to basic pay, ward sisters are eligible for additional payments, mainly for working unsocial hours or overtime. The table therefore includes an estimated hourly rate for total earnings for full-time staff. Pay rates for 1985 will be determined in the light of the recommendations of the review body for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine.

Contraceptives

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that contraceptive drugs or devices are not prescribed to children in care without the permission of their legal guardian.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for local authorities to seek such permissions as are necessary from the parent or legal guardian in respect of the upbringing of children in their care. This will differ according to the legal provisions under which the child has been placed in their care. Local authorities were informed on 21 December 1984, following the judgements of the Court of Appeal in the Gillick case, that our Department's guidance to doctors and other professionals on contraceptive and abortion advice and services to young people under 16 had been suspended.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any funds have been made available to non-governmental organisations to enable them to intervene in the case before the House of Lords concerning the prescription of contraceptive drugs and devices to children under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Children's Legal Centre

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date the latest payment of grant was made to the Children's Legal Centre; and what sum was involved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The latest instalment of the grant paid to the Children's Legal Centre amounted to £7,500 and was paid on 5 February 1985.

Camberwell Reception Centre

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what financial resources his Department intends to schedule to meet the special needs of single homeless men, following the closure of the Camberwell reception centre;

(2) whether his Department anticipates that local boroughs will be able to accept financial responsibility for those displaced by the closure of the Camberwell reception centre;

(3) what response his Department is making to the detailed proposals made by four London boroughs for alternatives to the closure of the Camberwell reception centre.

Mr. Whitney: The programme for the replacement of the Camberwell resettlement unit announced in November 1981 included the provision of 985 new hostel bedspaces jointly financed by this Department and the Department of the Environment. The Department of the Environment through the Housing Corporation will provide the capital for 785 bedspaces, the balance being funded by this Department. The revenue funding will come from charges to residents, hostel deficit grant from the Department of the Environment and direct grants from this Department. The eventual annual revenue cost of the direct grants from this Department will be £1·418 million at 1985-86 prices.

Part of the Camberwell replacement programme is the provision of hostels with direct access bedspaces. The financial involvement of the four London boroughs will be limited to this area. Negotiations with these boroughs about the financial arrangements are continuing.

Mrs. Julia Hall

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why it has taken two months to reply to a letter of 26 February from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South concerning the case of Mrs. Julia Hall.

Mr. John Patten: Following receipt of the hon. Member's letter of 28 February I called for reports on the case of Mrs. Julia Hall, who died in August 1982, from the local health authorities. Having received these reports I studied them in detail in order to satisfy myself that the health authorities had answered all the points raised about Mrs. Hall's treatment. I then wrote to the hon. Member on 18 April.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total revenue collected in each of the last five years in respect of (a) class 1 primary national insurance contributions, (b) class 1 secondary national insurance contributions, (c) class 2 national insurance contributions and (d) class 4 national insurance contributions; and if he will give the total number of employees and the self-employed paying contributions in each of those years.

Mr. Whitney: For the five years ending 31 March 1984 the figures are:

Year	Total revenue collected (£000)				Number of contributors (£000's)
	Class 1		Class 2	Class 4	Employees	Self employed	Part employed and part self employed

Loan Facilities

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what loan facilities are made available by his Department under present regulations; whether interest is charged; and if he has any plans to replace weekly additions and single payments with loans.

Mr. Whitney: Payments made under the Supplementary Benefit (Urgent Cases) Regulations are, in prescribed circumstances, recoverable. Details are published in Part 8 of the S manual, a copy of which is in the Library.

Single payments made under Supplementary Benefits (Single Payments) Regulation 21A—where a claimant is required to pay rent in advance on taking up a private tenancy—are recoverable from future housing benefit payments.

No interest is charged on any payments made under these regulations.

We are currently looking at provision for special expenses in the context of our review of social security, on which we expect to announce our conclusions shortly.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions have taken place with employers' organisations over the future of family income supplement.

Mr. Whitney: Family income supplement was one of the benefits which was considered in the social security review. There was opportunity for employers to comment both in writing and orally, and all views have been carefully considered. The Government's conclusions will be published shortly.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are in receipt of family income supplement; and of these how many have incomes of (a) less than £90 a week and (b) less than £100 a week.

Mr. Whitney: The latest figures showing a breakdown of family incomes assessed for family income supplement purposes relate to the end of October 1984. At this date, 204,000 families were receiving FIS, 170,000 families had assessable income of less than £90 a week and 193,000 families assessable income of less than £100 a week.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money would be saved by excluding from family income supplement (a) families with an income above £100 a week and (b) families with an income above £120 a week; and in each case how many families and how many children would be affected.

Mr. Whitney: The following estimates relate to awards made in the period November 1984-November 1985.

	Estimated savings £ million	No. of families	No. of children
(a) families excluded with assessable incomes above £100 weekly	6·0	20,000	75,000
(b) families excluded with assessable incomes above £120 weekly	0·5	2,000	10,000

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average payment of family income supplement.

Mr. Whitney: The average payment of family income supplement at the end of January 1985, the latest date at which this figure is available, was £11·90.

Community Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies he is presently conducting to examine changes in the level of community care resources to meet the increase in demand for social services facilities.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 356]: It is for individual local authorities, taking account of local circumstances and their own priorities, to assess what changes in social services facilities are needed to meet changing demands. The Audit Commission is helping that process with its studies on various aspects of the personal social services, and as announced in my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 25 February columns 75-6 the Department's new social services inspectorate aims to secure the most effective use of professional and other resources by identifying good practice and spreading knowledge about it. In addition the Department's research programme has over some years included a number of research projects directed at examining various aspects of community care provision.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Payments

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will break down the gross interest charged for the year 1985-86 in the sum of £17 billion, differentiating between index-linked stocks and others.

Mr. Peter Rees: The forecast of public sector gross debt interest payments in 1985-86 was revised up from £17 billion in Cmnd. 9428 to £18½ billion in the 1985-86 FSBR (table 6·5). Table 2·15 of Cmnd. 9428 showed an estimate of £1·2 billion for the servicing of indexed securities: this estimate remains unchanged.

Company Cars

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for each of the last five years for which figures are available, what are the total amounts by which the revenue generated by the taxation of company cars as benefits in kind fell short of the revenue which would have been generated had such cars been taxed on the basis of the full benefit enjoyed by their users.

Mr. Moore: I regret that information is not available on which to base a reliable estimate of the change in yield if the benefit from the private use of company cars were to be taxed on the basis described.

Estimates of the yields since 1977-78 arising from the taxation of this benefit (including car fuel benefit from 1983-84) were given in my reply of 1 April, at columns 507-8, to the hon. Member for Leicester, East. (Mr. Bruinvels).

Educational Charities (VAT)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax was repaid to educational charities in the year ended 30 September 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is no provision for repayments of value added tax to educational charities as such.

Philippines (Reciprocal Tax Arrangements)

Mr. Pendry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to negotiate reciprocal tax arrangements with the Phillipines Government in order to alleviate the current double taxation of Filipino workers living in Britain.

Mr. Moore: The United Kingdom already has a comprehensive double taxation convention with the Republic of the Philippines for the relief of double taxation on income and capital gains. The convention, which has been published as a schedule to Statutory Instrument No. 184 of 1978, contains the usual provisions for relief in respect of earnings from employment.

I am not aware of any problems of double taxation of income of Filipino workers living in Britain; but if the hon. Member has specific cases in mind, I should of course be pleased to look into them.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many convictions of importers were obtained in each year from 1982 and what penalties were imposed, in respect of the fraudulent importation of textile and clothing goods in circumvention of the quotas agreed under the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Companies and individuals convicted each year from 1982 for the fraudulent or attempted fraudulent importation of textile and clothing goods in circumvention of the quotas agreed under the multi-fibre arrangement and the fines and costs ordered to be paid by the courts are as follows:

	Number convicted	Court fines and costs £
1982	16	104,500
1983	3	2,550
1984	4	77,500
1985 to date	2	109,330

In addition to a monetary penalty, one person was also sentenced to six months imprisonment suspended for two years.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the agreement made at the Fontainebleau Council of Ministers placed any restriction on the timing of the approval by the Parliaments of member states of the increase in own resources as a precondition to the payment of the £600 million rebate for 1984; and if the position has altered in any respect following the decisions of subsequent meetings of the Council of Ministers;

(2) what estimate he has made of the amount by which Britain's net contribution to the European Economic Community in future years under the Fontainebleau arrangements will be increased or decreased if the proposal by the European Economic Community Commission dated 21 February to exclude from allocated expenditure a number of items in addition to the exclusion of development aid is adopted; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what estimate he has made of the amount of the United Kingdom rebate under the Fontainebleau formula which will be delayed until the next year in consequence of the proposal by the European Economic Community Commission dated 21 February to base the United Kingdom's abatement on a provisional or preliminary calculation; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will list in the Official Report the various items of expenditure by the European Economic Community which the Commission proposes in its communication dated 21 February should be excluded from allocated expenditure in addition to development aid in reaction to the calculation of the United Kingdom's abatement under the Fontainebleau arrangements; and if it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government that a detailed and comprehensive list of such items should be determined before the final own resources decision is approved by the Council of Ministers;

(5) what estimates he has made as to how the net payment to be made by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community for 1985 and the years immediately following on the basis of a value added tax contribution of 1·4 per cent. will compare with the actual net payment made by the United Kingdom in 1984 and the years immediately before on the basis of a 1 per cent. value added tax payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Customs and Excise (Control Visits)

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of Customs and Excise staff by grade currently involved in control visits.

Mr. Hayhoe: In the 1984-85 financial year Customs and Excise employed an average of 3,900 staff on control visiting work, 1,800 at higher executive officer and 2,100 at executive officer level.

Government Departments (Expenditure)

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated spending in Government Departments on telephone calls and standing charges in 1985-86; and how this compares with 1980-81.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 373-74]: Detailed information is not available centrally for the financial year 1985-86. The estimated spending in 1984-85 was £241·6 million compared with £154·8 million in 1980-81.

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated spending by Government Departments on travel and the purchase of cars and lorries in 1985-86; and how this compares with spending in 1980-81.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 374]: The information is not available in the form requested. Government Department's expenditure on travel and subsistence was £412 million in 1983-84 and £357 million in 1980-81. Government Departments' expenditure on the purchase of vehicles was £61 million in 1983-84 and £38 million in 1980-81.

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated spending in Government Departments on reprographics in 1985-86; and how this compares with spending in 1980-81.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 374]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current estimated cost to public funds of typing a page in a Government Department in (a) central London, and (b) in outer London; and how this compares with 1980-81.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 374]: No up-to-date figures are available centrally.

Accommodation Costs

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current on-cost averages for accommodation in central London, outer London and the provinces for every £100 of Civil Service staff salary; and how this compares with 1980-81.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 374]: The table shows the average percentage on-cost for accommodation based on Civil Service staff salaries for the financial year 1984-85 compared with 1980-81.

Area	1980-81 Percentage	1984-85 Percentage
Central London	51	42
Outer London	24	29
Provinces	19	18½

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has that black South Africans are overwhelmingly against a policy of economic sanctions against the South African Government.

Mr. Rifkind: We know from extensive contacts in South Africa that black opinon on this subject is sharply divided. Some prominent black leaders have declared that they are opposed to economic sanctions as a means of bringing about change in South Africa. A survey conducted by the University of Natal in May 1984 indicated that 75 per cent. of black workers favour continuing overseas trade links.

Figures from such polls have to be treated with some caution in the circumstances prevailing in South Africa, but the general conclusion seems valid.

Nicaragua

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the effect on the fairness of the elections in Nicaragua of the campaign by the Contra insurgents to disrupt polling.

Mr. Renton: We received no reports that the Contra insurgents disrupted polling. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) told the hon. Member on 16 April, physical harrassment by the Sandinistas led the main opposition parties to withdraw from the elections. In those circumstances, there was no possibility of a genuinely free and fair contest.

European Commission of Human Rights

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards proposals for reform of the procedures of the European Commission of Human Rights aimed at reducing delays in processing cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We support practical proposals for improving the procedures of the European Commission of Human Rights. On 19 March I signed the eighth protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights. After signature by all the members of the Council of Europe, this will have the effect of reducing delays.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average period of time taken to dispose of cases at the European Commission of Human Rights in which the United Kingdom Government are a defendant; and what information he has as to how this compares with cases involving other Governments.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available. We are making inquiries and I shall write to the hon. Member.

Embassies and High Commissions (Staff)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy regarding the staffing of United Kingdom embassies and high commissions with locally engaged staff; for which categories of job such staff are engaged; what criteria he applied in deciding these categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We employ locally engaged staff in positions where the continuity of service they provide and/or their detailed knowledge of the local scene will be of value to the mission and in junior support positions which cannot be sensibly filled by United Kingdom based officers.

Locally engaged officers can fill jobs in any section of our missions, but are principally employed on commercial, information, consular and administration work.

The allocation of jobs in our missions between United Kingdom based and locally engaged officers is reviewed during the course of Diplomatic Service inspections, or if the need arises at other times, by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Soviet Jews

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made in recent times to the Soviet Union to recognise the requests of Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate to Israel; what information he has regarding Jewish emigration figures from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1984 and 1985 to the most recent week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and my right hon. and learned Friend, both raised the plight of Soviet Jewry with Mr. Gorbachev last December and made clear our concern at the drastic cutback in the permitted level of Jewish emigration since 1979. According to our records, around 900 Jews were allowed to leave the Soviet Union in 1984; the figure for the first quarter of 1985 was 247. We shall continue to press this matter and the wider problems of Soviet Jewry with the Soviet authorities on every suitable occasion.

Chilean Ambassador

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will be the new Chilean ambassador to the United Kingdom; and when it is expected that he will take up his appointment.

Mr. Renton: The Chilean ambassador, Professor Orrego, has formally notified us that he will leave his post on 15 July. We have not yet received a request for agreement for a successor.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Open University

11. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the factors which he takes into account in determining the level of grant for the Open University.

Sir Keith Joseph: An important factor is the need to contain public expenditure. Other factors are the university's prevailing level of grant, Government allowances for inflation, and the advice received from the Open University visiting committee on the effect of grant levels on the university's programme of work.

39. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the vice chancellor of the Open University; and what subjects were discussed.

Sir Keith Joseph: I last met the vice-chancellor together with officers and members of the university's council, on 3 December 1984; we discussed the effect of the reductions in grant on the university's programme.

Universities (Grants)

14. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the percentage change in grants in real terms for the universities between 1980-81 and 1986-87.

Mr. Brooke: Comparing levels of university grant between years is complicated because of the many changes in funding arrangements that have taken place. Adjusting recurrent grant only for additions made to compensate universities for changes in the level of the home tuition fee shows a decrease in real terms of about 11 per cent. between the financial years 1980-81 and 1986-87.

Student Grants

15. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to issue his consultative document on the review of student grants.

Mr. Brooke: As my right hon. Friend announced on 24 January 1985, a consultative paper will be issued as soon as practicable.

26. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the current levels of student grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend has received 2,350 representations about the level of grant for 1984-85 and 2,460 representations about the level of grant for 1985-86.

Ethnic Minority Pupils

16. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implications of chapter 8, "The Education of Ethnic Minority Pupils", of the White Paper, "Better Schools".

Mr. Dunn: Chapter 8 "Better Schools" develops the Government's response to the report of the Swann committee. The measures outlined there are designed to tackle the obstacles to achievement experienced by all pupils and to meet the special needs of ethnic minority pupils.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why he took the decision to rule out the possibility of increased grants for areas with a high proportion of ethnic minority pupils as recommended in the Swann report; and why he is not willing to make special arrangements for ethnic minority students by allowing them mandatory grants for study which precedes higher education.

Mr. Dunn: It is open to local education authorities to seek grant aid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 or the urban programme to support new initiatives designed to meet the educational needs of ethnic minority children. In the case of section 11, provided what an authority proposes is designed to meet the special needs of Commonwealth origin pupils, and is consistent with the Home Office's administrative guidelines, funding is made available.

Under the provisions of the Education Act 1962 mandatory awards can be made available for first degree and comparable level courses only. The Government are conducting a thorough review of the student support system. Pending that review, and bearing in mind the considerable public expenditure implications of a change, it would be inappropriate to alter the legislation to accord more favourable treatment to one particular group of students.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what specific assistance he proposes to give to local education authorities to enable them to provide specialised educational facilities for pupils of ethnic minority groups who are underachieving at school.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities already have the means at their disposal to respond to ethnic minority needs. The presence of ethnic minorities is one factor taken into account in calculating the additional educational needs indicator of grant related expenditure which underlies the annual distribution of rate support grant to local authorities. In addition, the Home Office supports under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 some £75 million of local authority expenditure on additional educational posts deployed to meet the special needs of Commonwealth origin children; £4·5 million is devoted in the urban programme to educational projects of benefit to the ethnic minorities; and in 1985-86 a further £1 million of expenditure is being supported by education support grants on innovative projects designed to improve the performance of ethnic minority children and to promote harmonious race relations in schools.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will invite representatives of the Commission for Racial Equality to discuss their study relating to findings in the Birmingham area about high rates of suspensions imposed on ethnic minority school pupils.

Mr. Dunn: Officials of the Department are in touch with the Commission about this study, which was based on figures for the period 1974 to 1980 (since when the local education authority has reviewed its suspension arrangements).

"Better Schools"

18. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has received so far to his White Paper "Better Schools".

28. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the White Paper, "Better Schools".

Sir Keith Joseph: Almost all of the correspondence received so far shows broad support for the Government's objectives. I look forward to discussing the White Paper in more detail with our partners in the education service.

30. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has received from local education authorities to his White Paper, "Better Schools".

Sir Keith Joseph: I look forward to discussing the White Paper with the local authority associations in the near future.

34. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much additional expenditure will be necessary to implement the proposals contained in the White Paper, "Better Schools".

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 1 April at column 423.

44. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he plans to discuss the White Paper, "Better Schools," with the National Union of Teachers and the National Association of Schoolmasters — Union of Women Teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have invited the main teachers' organisations to discuss the White Paper "Better Schools" with me, and look forward to hearing their views.

Teachers (Pay)

20. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on progress in the discussions about the linking of the assessment of teachers' performance with pay increments.

Sir Keith Joseph: The teachers' panel rejected the link proposed by the employers at a meeting of the Burnham joint working party on salary structure on 5 December 1984. The teachers' panel have since refused to take part in further discussions in that forum but, following on from the meeting I had with the National Union of Teachers on 21 January, officials from the Department had a useful exploratory meeting last week with representatives of the teacher unions to discuss the principle and potential uses of performance appraisal.

27. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current teachers' pay claim.

29. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on teachers' pay.

40. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mr. Proctor), the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Freud), my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley), and the hon. Members for Colne Valley (Mr. Wainwright) and Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham).

32. Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will call together the unions and employers under his chairmanship to seek to resolve the current teachers' pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: No. The machinery for determining school teachers' pay is the Burnham primary and secondary committee, which has an independent chairman. As my hon. Friend may know, the management panel wrote to the teachers' panel on 22 April proposing an early meeting of the full Committee preceded by informal talks.

35. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any further representations from any of the teachers' unions regarding their present salary demand.

Sir Keith Joseph: Since 19 March I have received just one letter on this subject from the associations at national level as well as numerous letters from individual teachers and local union representatives.

36. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to introduce legislation to change to a two-tier system for teachers' pay, a minimum agreed nationally, topped up with locally agreed supplements.

Sir Keith Joseph: In accordance with the Remuneration of Teachers Act 1965, the Burnham Primary and Secondary Committee transmits recommendations on teachers' pay to the holder of my office who must, by order, direct that teachers shall be paid accordingly, but employers have a measure of discretion in deciding which scale shall apply to the individual teacher. I have no plans to change the present system.

43. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received alleging a party political campaign within the current teachers' dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have received no such representations although I have seen reports that the two largest teacher unions intend to bias their disruptive action against Conservative-controlled authorities. Such an approach will not cause the Government to shift its position.

Heriot-Watt University

21. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the future of the pharmacy teaching facility at the Heriot-Watt university.

Mr. Brooke: As I said in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 22 January at column 377, my right hon. Friend understands that the University Grants Committee has given careful consideration to the points put forward by the university and the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain at a meeting held in December 1984, but has concluded that no new arguments were put forward that would justify their altering their previous decision.

Education Expenditure

22. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to alter the balance of education expenditure as between buildings and equipment on the one hand and teachers' salaries on the other.

Sir Keith Joseph: No. The Government's plans for current expenditure (including teachers' salaries) and for capital expenditure on education remain as set out in Cmnd. 9428. At local level, it is for local education authorities to use the resources available to them, bearing in mind their statutory responsibilities and local priorities.

School Sizes

23. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to give statutory effect to his proposals on the minimum size of schools contained in his recent White Paper.

Mr. Dunn: No. The proposals in "Better Schools" are intended to provide the basis for discussion with my right hon. friend's partners in the education service about the principles which should guide local education authorities and the governors of voluntary schools in their rationalisation of school provision as pupil numbers fall; following this discussion my right hon. Friend will issue general guidance, to be acted upon in the light of the local factors involved.

Engineering and Technology

24. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is yet in a position to announce which institutions will benefit from the new programme to increase engineering and technology places in higher education announced in the Budget statement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills).

Schools (Self-managing Status)

25. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to confer upon schools in the maintained sector self-managing status along the lines of schools in the independent sector within a system of per capita assessment block grants.

Mr. Dunn: Chapter 9 of the White Paper "Better Schools" conveys the Government's intention to legislate to increase financial delegation from LEAs to the governing bodies of maintained schools. Our proposals will increase the scope for cost-conscious and sound financial management in both schools and LEAs. But LEAs remain responsible for the disbursement of their resources as a whole.

School Libraries

31. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will issue guidance to local education authorities about the contents of books in school libraries.

Mr. Dunn: We look to schools and to local education authorities to behave responsibly on this matter, but have no plans to issue detailed guidance on it.

Student Unions

33. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made towards making certain aspects of the support for student unions voluntary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend hopes shortly to consider the outcome of the informal consultations with higher education interests undertaken by his officials, and the further action he intends to take.

GCSE (Distinction and Merit Certificates)

37. Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce the subject requirements at GCSE for his new distinction and merit certificates.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement before the summer recess. The Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office published proposals last December, and comments have been invited by the end of April.

Education Achievement

38. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek to involve further the ordinary classroom teacher in the development of his policies towards higher standards of achievement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Teachers are involved in the development of policies for higher standards through their contribution to LEA policy, through subject associations, and through their influence on their national organisations. But the key contribution is their work in the classroom: the White Paper "Better Schools" makes it clear that best practice in LEAs and schools will form the basis for broad agreement about national objectives for the curriculum and for improvements in the effectiveness of education.

Nursery Education

41. Mr. Foster asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on nursery education in the light of the White Paper, "Better Schools."

Mr. Dunn: Chapter 4 of the White Paper "Better Schools" states the Government's position on education of the under-fives. In particular, the Government's aim will be that its plans for LEAs' expenditure should allow provision attributable to under fives to continue in real terms within broadly the same totals as at present; within these totals there is scope for local flexibility and improvements in both quality and cost-effectiveness.

Unemployed Persons (Open University Courses)

42. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Open University's provision of courses for the unemployed.

Sir Keith Joseph: All of the university's courses are open to the unemployed. The Government provide an earmarked fund — £600,000 in 1985 — to assist unemployed Open University students with their fees. It is also providing special funding for the development by the university of learning materials of particular relevance to the unemployed.

Apley Park School, Shropshire

45. Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now announce his decision on the future of Apley Park school, near Bridgnorth, Shropshire.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is not yet able to announce his decision on these proposals. He will do so as soon as he has completed his detailed consideration of the issues involved, including the arguments advanced by Shropshire county council in support of their proposals and the views of those who have exercised their statutory right to object.

Foreign Language Teaching

46. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to discuss with the teaching profession improvements in foreign language education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend discussed foreign language education with members of the Joint Council of Language Associations at their conference last month. The White Paper "Better Schools" set out our views on the provision of foreign languages in schools and our intention to develop these in a policy statement later this year. As I have replied today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel), we are looking forward to discussing "Better Schools" with the teacher unions.

Medical Science

47. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Medical Research Council about the effects cuts in the council's budget will have on medical science in Britain.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend met the chairman and secretary of the Medical Research Council (MRC) on 23 July 1984 but has had no further discussions on this matter since then. The grant-in-aid to the MRC in 1985-86, announced in January, is £122·3 million. This represents an increase of £2·1 million over previously published plans for the year.

Higher Education

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of extra higher education places in the Bradford area in information technology-related subjects as a result of the Government's information technology initiative of 1982; and how much funding is being made available over the next three years to pay for more students in higher education in the area to study engineering and technology.

Sir Keith Joseph: Under the IT Initiative which I announced in December 1982, Bradford university was allocated one additional teaching post, and 13 additional postgraduate studentships a year, in the department of computer science.

On 3 April 1985 I announced at columns 618-20 that Bradford university was being invited, under the first phase of the engineering and technology initiative, to provide additional places for intakes of 30 undergraduate and 20 postgraduate electrical engineering students each year. The university will receive some £730,000 over the three years 1985-86—1987-88 for this purpose.

Teachers (Dispute)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the number of pupil days disrupted by the current teachers' strikes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Comprehensive information about the extent and effects of recent industrial action is not available centrally. The proportion of pupils who have been directly affected by strikes at any one time is relatively small. The selective strikes called by the two largest teacher unions have affected something of the order of 5 per cent. of the 8·3 million pupils in England and Wales. However, the cumulative effect of strikes and other forms of disruptive action is to damage the education of a very large number of pupils throughout the country. The Government deplore the fact that some teachers are willing to prosecute their pay claim in this way.

Bursaries

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of bursaries which have been allocated to individual students in each academic year since 1978-79 for postgraduate study in the faculties of mechanical and electrical engineering.

Mr. Brooke: The numbers of research studentships and advanced course studentships in mechanical and electrical engineering made by the Science and Engineering Research Council each year since 1978-79 are as follows:

	Mechanical Engineering	Electrical Engineering
1978-79	71	46
1979-80	163	70
1980-81	33	18
1981-82	54	12
1982-83	60	12
1983-84	64	7
1984-85	72	12
1985-86	98	16

School Sizes

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines his Department currently issues to local education authorities concerning the minimum and maximum size of schools.

Mr. Dunn: Current guidance is set out in circular 2/81, a copy of which I am sending to my hon. Friend. The circular urges local education authorities to seize the educational and financial benefits of taking surplus school places out of use and draws attention to the sizes of schools below which disproportionate resourcing is required if appropriate educational opportunities are to be maintained. The proposals in chapter 10 of the White Paper "Better Schools" are intended to provide the basis for discussions with my right hon. Friend's partners in the education service about whether new guidance should be issued. The Department does not produce guidelines on maximum school sizes.

Universities (Jarratt Committee Report)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financing was allocated by his Department for the purpose of the report of the Jarratt committee on university efficiency; and what is his response to the recommendations which were issued in the report.

Mr. Brooke: The total contribution of this Department to the cost of the work of the Committee appointed by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals under the chairmanship of Sir Alex Jarratt and of the associated efficiency studies in individual universities is expected when all accounts have been paid to be about £350,000. The committee has produced recommendations which merit serious and early consideration by those to whom they are addressed. My right hon. Friend will be considering with the CVCP and the University Grants Committee how the report can best be pursued.

Teachers

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report those units or institutions providing teacher training on a denominational basis, stating the denomination, and the percentage change in intake since 1979, and indicating any proposals for closure of the courses.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested for England is as follows:

Institution	Denomination	Per cent. change in intake 1979-84
Bishop Grosseteste College Lincoln	C of E	+66
Chester College	C of E	−26
Christ Church College Canterbury	C of E	+18
King Alfred's College Winchester	C of E	+20
La Sainte Union College of Higher Education Southampton	RC	+3
Liverpool Institute of Higher Education	Federation of former RC and C of E Colleges	+31
Newman College Birmingham	RC	−44
Ripon and York St. John College of Higher Education, York	C of E	−23
Roehampton Institute of Higher Education	Federation of former C of E, RC, Methodist and non-denominational Colleges	−22
College of St. Mark and St. John Plymouth	C of E	−33
St. Martin's College Lancaster	C of E	+7
St. Mary's College Twickenham	RC	−7
College of St. Paul and St. Mary, Cheltenham	C of E	−24

Westhill College Birmingham	Free Church	+42
Westminster College, Oxford	Methodist	−3

The National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education has been asked by my right hon. Friend to advise on the distribution between public sector institutions in England of intakes to initial teacher training for the period 1986-89. I cannot anticipate what advice the National Advisory body will submit in respect of individual institutions.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what progress is being made on moves to equalise the entitlement to pensions of teachers' widows and widowers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the entitlement to pensions and family benefits of male and female teachers, respectively; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his estimate of the cost of equalising the entitlement to pension and family benefits of men and women teachers (a) expressed as a total sum and (b) expressed in relation to teachers' contributions to the superannuation fund.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to my replies on 22 April to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) at column 371.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report for the latest year for which figures are available (a) the number of teachers' widowers affected by the present rules on teacher's pension entitlement and (b) the average and total amount paid in pension to teachers' widows.

Mr. Dunn: The number of teachers' widowers affected by the present rules on pension entitlement is not known. In the financial year 1984-85 the total paid in pension to teachers' widows was £12,837,306. The average widow's pension, calculated on the basis of 9,590 pensions paid in March 1985, was £1,433·50 per annum.

Children (Illegal Sexual Relationships)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that none of the material available in schools encourages children under the age of 16 years to take part in illegal sexual relationships.

Mr. Dunn: The choice of materials for use in schools is the responsibility of local education authorities and schools themselves. However, Ministers hold the firm view that sex education should be sound and appropriate, and we would regard with great concern any instance of the availability in schools of materials of the sort my hon. Friend describes.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of parents of assisted places pupils and (b) the percentage of all such parents in each income category in respect of the income schedule for the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is, in respect of the school year 1984-85, as follows:

Relevant income	Number of pupils	Percentage of total
Up to £6,046	6,581	38·0
£6,047 to £6,390	569	3·3
£6,391 to £6,910	841	4·9
£6,911 to £7,950	1,723	10·0
£7,951 to £9,550	2,798	16·2
£9,551 to £11,630	2,690	15·5
£11,631 and more:
(a) assisted	1,371	7·9
(b) currently ineligible for assistance	742	4·2

DEFENCE

Ethiopia (Military Personnel)

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has had any discussions with the Ethiopian Government about the training of Ethiopian military personnel in the United Kingdom in the future.

Mr. Lee: No.

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ethiopian military personnel underwent training in the United Kingdom during 1984.

Mr. Lee: None; but one Ethiopian civilian, our ambassador's driver, was given training in close protection in that year.

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any Ethiopian military personnel receiving training in the United Kingdom at the present time.

Mr. Lee: There are currently no Ethiopian military personnel receiving training in United Kingdom military establishments.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there are any plans to transfer work currently done in establishments in Portsmouth to the dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth, following the implementation of his proposals for commercial management at Devonport and Rosyth;

(2) if he will give an assurance that the announcement made concerning the dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth will have no effect on the Portsmouth naval base;

(3) if any personnel will be transferred from Portsmouth to Devonport or Rosyth because of his Department's proposals for commercial management.

Mr. Lee: No.decisions on future arrangements for the royal dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth will be taken until the end of the period of consultation. It is therefore too early to say what the precise implications of any decisions might be on other areas of fleet support. However, whatever decision is taken for Devonport and Rosyth, it is envisaged that Portsmouth fleet operating and maintenance base will continue in its present role; the need for transfers from Portsmouth is not foreseen. It would, of course, be open to employees at Portsmouth to apply to be considered for transfer into the dockyards, with a view to transferring to any new arrangements.

Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to alter the current proposals for arrangements for pay personnel and records in the Portsmouth naval base and the service establishments in the surrounding area.

Mr. Lee: No.

Polaris

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to convert Polaris submarines for some other use.

Mr. Lee: No.

Trident

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies he has made over the past two years regarding alternatives to Trident.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) on 7 February 1985, at column 678.

Arms Control Unit

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the arms control unit of his Department will publicly report its findings.

Mr. Stanley: The work of the defence arms control unit represents advice to Ministers which will be regarded as confidential in the normal way. The Government's arms control policies, on which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office retains the lead responsibility, will continue to be set out in Government documents and ministerial statements as appropriate, including, as necessary, in the Statement on the Defence Estimates.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Zimbabwe

2. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received representations about the repatriation to the United Kingdom of money and other assets owned by individuals formerly resident in Zimbabwe; and if he will raise this matter in his next meeting with the Prime Minister of Zimbabwe.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. We take every opportunity to impress upon the Zimbabwe authorities the hardship which their controls can cause and the need to exercise flexibility wherever possible. Both my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend have discussed this matter with Mr. Mugabe in recent months.

54. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British subjects are currently in detention in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We known of seven mono-British citizens detained in Zimbabwe. One is held under the Zimbabwean Emergency Powers Act; the remaining six have been convicted on various criminal charges. Our consular staff in Zimbabwe do all they properly can to help the detainees and, unless specifically requested not to, make prison visits.

South Africa

4. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take action to close all the loopholes in the United Nations mandatory arms embargo in South Africa.

Mr. Rifkind: We believe that the United Nations arms embargo is effective. We are not aware that any further measures are required to strengthen it.

18. Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the call by the Commonwealth Secretary General of 22 February for sanctions against South Africa.

Mr. Rifkind: We do not believe that wider economic sanctions would achieve the changes we want to see. If they were effective they would hurt the black community and South Africa's neighbours, including Commonwealth countries. Trade and investment links are an important means of encouraging change.

29. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government propose to take any action in the United Nations in the light of recent events in South Africa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We condemned the recent action by the South African police at Uitenhage and have repeatedly made our views about such violence known to the South African Government. We also supported the adoption of Security Council resolution 560 which expressed in strong terms the views of the international community on apartheid and on recent events in South Africa.

Iran—Iraq War

5. Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends, in view of the escalation of the war between Iraq and Iran, to urge his European Economic Community partners to impose an arms embargo on these countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom is impartial in the Gulf conflict and supplies no items of defence equipment which might significantly enhance the capability of either side to prolong or exacerbate the conflict. We do not believe an arms embargo would be an effective method of ending this conflict, although we would welcome it if our European Community allies followed our very restrictive policy on supply to both sides.

50. Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the total number of military and civilian casualties in the capital cities of Iraq and Iran; and whether there has been any progress towards a peace settlement.

Mr. Luce: We have no precise information regarding casualties in the capital cities of Iraq and Iran, although we have noted the resumption of attacks on civilian targets in the Gulf conflict with great concern. We have participated in demarches in both Tehran and Baghdad with our European Community partners, calling on both sides to respond to appeals by the United Nations Secretary-General to stop these attacks.

68. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is considering any further initiatives to end the Iraq-Iran war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: We wish to see the earliest possible end to the tragic and wasteful conflict in the Gulf, and we are prepared to support any realistic initiatives, especially those through the good offices of the United Nations Secretary-General.

Lebanon

9. Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Syrian Government to obtain the release of British and other foreign citizens kidnapped in Lebanon, and to obtain assurances that such acts will not be repeated.

Mr. Luce: Her Majesty's ambassador at Damascus has on several occasions sought the help of the Syrian authorities in these deplorable kidnapping cases and the Syrian Government have undertaken to work for the early release of the victims. We were relieved to learn of the release of Mr. Nash and Mr. Levick and we are doing all we can to help Mr. Collett regain his freedom.

28. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent events in the Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: We deeply regret continuing acts of violence in different parts of Lebanon, notably in the south. We welcome recent progress towards Israeli withdrawal from Lebanese territory, and Israeli statements that all Israeli forces will soon be withdrawn from Lebanon. We look for the early completion of this full withdrawal.

40. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest advice being given by Her Majesty's Government to British subjects, including diplomats, in Lebanon and specifically in west Beirut; and what measures he has taken to afford them protection.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: British nationals have been advised to leave West Beirut and where possible to defer visits to Lebanon for the time being. Appropriate measures are being taken to protect embassy staff and buildings in Beirut.

British Broadcasting Corporation

10. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to develop the external services of the British Broadcasting Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We are fully conscious of the need to support the external services. The external services' funding for the current financial year, at approximately £91 million—with relay stations, over £100 million—is about 7 per cent. higher in real terms than last year. Significant progress has been made in implementing our capital expenditure programme of some £100 million agreed in 1981 to improve the BBC's audibility overseas, which remains a high priority.

Pakistan

12. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with Pakistan.

Mr. Renton: We maintain good relations with Pakistan.

EC (Mediterranean Programmes)

17. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom of the revised terms for the integrated Mediterranean programmes.

Mr. Rifkind: The total additional amount agreed by the European Council for integrated Mediterranean programmes was 1·6 billion ecu—about £950 million. As a result of the Fontainebleau settlement, the United Kingdom's financing share will be some 7 per cent.—less than the £10 million per annum.

El Salvador

19. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in El Salvador and its implications for United Kingdom relations with that country.

Mr. Renton: The National Assembly and municipal elections in El Salvador are a further demonstration of the consolidation of democracy in that country. We continue to support the efforts of the Salvadorean Government to secure democratic progress and stability, both in El Salvador and in central America as a whole.

44. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for democratic stability in El Salvador in the light of the recent elections.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) earlier today.

58. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in El Salvador.

Mr. Tim Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley.

77. Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and El Salvador in the light of recent political developments in that country.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham).

Star Wars Policy

22. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received many representations regarding his comments on the star wars policy of the American Administration.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have received a number of comments about the United States strategic defence initiative, particularly following my speech on 15 March about "Defence and Security in the Nuclear Age". Most of these have been in support of our policy.

Lebanon (Syrian Withdrawal)

24. Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Syrian Government have given a date for their withdrawal from Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: We are not aware of any Syrian announcement on this subject.

Ballistic Missiles (Soviet Research)

25. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to publicise the extent of Soviet research into defences against ballistic missiles.

Mr. Luce: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear, Soviet programmes in this field are indeed extensive and long-established. My right hon. and learned Friend referred to them in his speech on 15 March. We broadly endorse the assessment which appears in the 1985 edition of Soviet Military Power published by the United States Department of Defence.

39. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department now possesses on the subject of Soviet research into defences against ballistic missiles.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson).

Sri Lanka

26. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and Sri Lanka in the light of the Prime Minister's recent visit.

Mr. Renton: The good relations we enjoy with the Government of Sri Lanka were further strengthened by the visit of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister from 11 to 13 April.

New Zealand (Anglo-American Agreements)

27. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there has been any change in New Zealand's access to information under existing Anglo-American agreements.

Mr. Renton: It is not our practice to confirm or deny the existence of arrangements of this sort.

President Dos Santos

30. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent visit to southern Africa, he met President Dos Santos of Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Zimbabwe, Zambia and Kenya in January. He did not meet President Dos Santos of Angola.

Falkland Islands

31. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has had with Argentina concerning the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: Whilst we are not prepared to discuss the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands, we have since the Falklands conflict taken a number of initiatives to achieve more normal bilateral relations with Argentina. For example, we have made plain to the Argentines our readiness to accept a suitably prepared visit by next of kin of Argentine service men buried there.

President Gemayel

32. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to seek a meeting with President Gemayel of the Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend was received by his Excellency the President of Lebanon on 28 October 1984 in his palace near Beirut. He has no plans to seek a further audience at present.

EC (Ministerial Meetings)

33. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with his opposite numbers in other European Economic Community countries; and what was discussed.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I met other European Community Foreign Ministers at the European Council on 29-30 March, which my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, reported to the House on 2 April, [Vol. 76, c. 26-31]. I had previously attended the Foreign Affairs Council from 17 to 19 March, as my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) reported to the House on 25 March, [Vol. 76, c. 1063-72]. I also held bilateral discussions on Community and other international issues with the Belgian Foreign Minister at Chequers and Chevening on 2-3 March.

Soviet Foreign Minister (UK Visit)

34. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a date has yet been fixed for the planned visit of the Soviet Foreign Minister to the United Kingdom.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. Dates are however being discussed by the two Governments.

Disarmament Talks (Geneva)

35. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, at the recent Western European Union meeting in Bonn, he discussed with his colleagues the United States-Union of Soviet Socialist Republics nuclear disarmament talks in Geneva; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Yes, as the communiqué of our meeting made clear, we exchanged views on a range of subjects including all aspects of the United States-Union of Soviet Socialist Republics talks in Geneva. We also discussed arms control and disarmament, European defence questions, East-West relations and European armaments co-operation, as well as examining problems of WEU institutional reform. Copies of the communiqué have been placed in the Library.

36. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the disarmament negotiations currently taking place in Geneva.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 18 April, [Vol. 77, c. 252.]

EC European Council

37. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the European Council has now agreed to extend the scope of majority voting in its meetings.

Mr. Rifkind: The Council has not agreed to any changes in the present scope for majority voting.

Iran

38. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Iran.

Mr. Luce: It is not our policy to comment on the internal affairs of other nations.

International Debt Crisis

41. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held by European Economic Community Foreign Ministers concerning the debt crisis.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend meets Foreign Ministers of European Community and other countries regularly. International debt issues are frequently discussed.

Middle East

42. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy with regard to the middle east.

Mr. Luce: We remain committed to the search for a peaceful settlement of he Arab-Israel dispute. We support King Hussein's efforts to arrive at a common Arab position, and Pesident Mubarak's further suggestions in that direction. We seek the restoration of the unity, stability and prosperity of Lebanon and a peaceful solution to the Gulf conflict. We are ready to support constructive moves by the parties directly involved.

47. Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on progress towards a middle east peace settlement.

Mr. Luce: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow).

Malaysia

43. Mr Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Malaysia in the light of the Prime Minister's visit to that country.

Mr. Luce: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 16 April. [Vol. 77, c. 132.].

EC (Council of Ministers)

45. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Commission proposals for 1985 made to the last meeting of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind : I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 27 March. [Vol. 76, c. 209.]

Indonesia

46. Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Indonesian relations in the light of the Prime Minister's recent visit to Indonesia.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom enjoys good relations with Indonesia which have been further strengthened by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's visit from 9-11 April and by the full range of discussions she had with President Suharto and senior Indonesian Ministers.

Iraq

48. Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic and other measures Her Majesty's Government intend to take against Iraq in the light of continual use of chemical weapons in the Gulf war.

Mr. Luce: As we have made clear many times in the past, most recently in a statement issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 29 March 1985, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, we rigorously condemn the use of chemical weapons wherever it occurs. We will continue to work strenuously at the Geneva conference on disarmament for a total ban on such weapons which would include the prevention of civil chemicals being directed to military use.

Nigeria

49. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with Nigeria.

Mr. Rifkind: We greatly value our relations with Nigeria, and will continue to work for the restoration of their traditional warmth and friendliness.

Islamic Fundamentalism

51. Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will have discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts to discuss measures to counter Islamic fundamentalism in the middle east.

Mr. Luce: We keep in close touch with our partners in the European Community on all aspects of the continuing conflicts in the Middle East. Our policy is to support constructive moves towards negotiated solutions of the problems of the area.

Mr. Richard Perle

52. Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet Mr. Richard Perle, the United States Assistant Secretary of State for Defence.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so.

EC (Policies)

53. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further proposals he intends to place before his European Community partners for the development of Community policies.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We put forward a number of proposals in the ad hoc Committee on Institutional Affairs and the separate committee on a People's Europe whose reports, in the latter case the first half only, have been placed in the Library of the House. We shall now be discussing these proposals with other member Governments. We shall be seeking effective follow-up of our initiative to remove the regulatory burden on small businesses. We shall continue to press for progress towards the completion of the common market for goods and services.

UN Arms Embargo

55. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will strengthen the United Nations mandatory arms embargo by supporting an extension of the embargo by the Security Council to include oil and petroleum products.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay).

EC (Enlargement)

56. Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the safeguards which will be introduced to protect the interests of the south Mediterranean countries whose exports to the European Economic Community will be directly affected by the recent enlargement of the Community.

Mr. Rifkind: The Community recognises the real concern of its Mediterranean partners over the maintenance of their preferential trade access to European Community market following enlargement. The Foreign Affairs Council of 30 March adopted a statement reaffirming the Community's intention to endeavour to maintain traditional trade patterns with its Mediterranean partners and to work for mutually satisfactory solutions. I have arranged for a copy of the statement to be placed in the Library of the House.

Latin America

57. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what importance he attaches to human rights in determining the development of relations with countries in Latin America.

Mr. Renton: Concern for human rights plays an important part in determining our relations with countries in all parts of the world, including those of Latin America.

EC (Funds)

59. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the intergovernmental agreement of EEC Foreign Ministers designed to meet the shortfall in funds for 1985.

Mr. Rifkind: At its meeting on 21 March, the Foreign Affairs Council agreed, subject to the approval of national parliaments, to fund the Community's irreducible financial obligations in 1985 through an intergovernmental agreement. The Budget Council on 23 April agreed on the amount of finance involved. My hon. Friend the Economic Secretary will be reporting the outcome of the Council to the House.

Uganda

60. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the high commissioner for Uganda; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the high commissioner for Uganda, together with the Ugandan Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, on 7 February. They discussed a number of issues in our bilateral relations including human rights, Uganda's economy and British military training assistance.

Singapore

61. Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Singapore in the light of the Prime Minister's visit to that country.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom's relations with Singapore are excellent. There are no bilateral problems of significance. During her recent visit to Singapore, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had wide-ranging talks with Mr. Lee Kuan Yew and energetically promoted British commercial and industrial interests.

Strategic Defence Initiative

62. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made in recent weeks to the United States Administration concerning its strategic defence initiative.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We remain in close and constant contact with the United States Administration, as well as with our other allies, about the strategic defence initiative research programme.

EC (Venice Declaration)

63. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he and his European Economic Community colleagues are considering to build upon the European Economic community Venice declaration on the Middle East to help progress toward a settlement in that region.

Mr. Luce: At the European Council in Brussels on 29-30 March, the Ten reaffirmed their desire to see urgent efforts made to establish peace and stability in the Middle East and their willingness to assist efforts to that end. With our partners in the Ten we shall continue to do all we can to encourage a negotiated solution on the basis of our well-known balanced approach, but the primary responsibility for progress must remain with the parties directly concerned.

EC (Budgetary Achievements)

64. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the budgetary achievements of the European Economic Community in the past year.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In the last year, the Community has made progress in two important respects on the budget front. First, it has agreed on a lasting solution to the United Kingdom's budget problem and accepted in principle that any member State sustaining a similar inequitable budgetary burden may benefit from a correction. Secondly, it has agreed that the rigorous rules which govern budgetary policy in Member States shall also apply to Community spending, in particular by fixing each year a maximum level of expenditure for all Community policies and ensuring that agricultural expenditure will increase by less than the rate of growth of the own resources base.

EC Proposals (Parliamentary Approval)

65. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to submit for parliamentary approval (a) the European Economic Community intergovernmental agreement, (b) the increase in the value-added tax ceiling and (c) the accession treaties of Spain and Portugal.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not yet possible to give firm dates for the submission to Parliament of the intergovernmental agreement, the new own resources decision and the accession treaties.

Arab Terrorism (Lebanon)

66. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to protect British citizens, including diplomats, from kidnapping or other terrorist outrages by Arab terrorists in Lebanon.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett).

El Salvador (Officer Training)

67. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the selection of officers from El Salvador for training in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the Hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) on 15 February. [Vol 73, c. 302.]

British Vice-Consul (Vigo)

69. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received advocating the retention of the office of Her Majesty's Government's vice-consul in Vigo, Spain.

Mr. Renton: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received five representations advocating the retention of the British consulate in Vigo.

Israel (EC Exports)

70. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) has held in the European Community Council of Ministers regarding the effect on Israel's export of citrus and other fruits and vegetables to the European Community after the accession of Spain and Portugal; and with what results.

Mr. Rifkind: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for East Kilbride. (Dr. Miller).

EC (Reforms)

71. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what reforms have been considered by European Economic Community Ministers in recent months.

Mr. Rifkind: The Council has reached agreement on the implementation of the budgetary reforms agreed at Fontainbleau. The European Council has made progress towards a common market for goods and services a major priority and has set a target date for completion of 1992. Institutional reforms have been considered by the ad hoc Committee on Institutional Affairs whose report is available in the Library of the House and will be the subject of intergovernmental discussions in the coming months.

Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty

72. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the implementation of the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Luce: Although not party to this bilateral United States — Soviet treaty, we regard it as an important element in the current strategic situation. The treaty contains mechanisms by which any suspected violations can be pursued.

Israel (Lebanon Policy)

73. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what restraints Her Majesty's Government are placing on the Israeli Government in the light of their iron fist policy in Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: We have made it clear that we deeply deplore the appalling violence in south Lebanon, which underlines the need for the early and complete withdrawal of all Israeli forces from Lebanese territory. In direct response to the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982, which we condemned, we imposed restrictions on arms sales to Israel.

Namibia

74. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a progress report on discussions with the Contact Group of Five and South Africa on implementation of United Nations resolution 435 for the independence of Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind: We remain in close touch with our Contact Group partners over developments in the current negotiations towards a Namibia settlement. We also take every opportunity to urge the South Africans to be flexible and realistic in their approach to these negotiations in order to bring about early implementation of Security Council resolution 435.

79. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent progress has been made towards independence for Namibia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Discussions are continuing between the United States, Angola and South Africa, aimed at finding a formula for Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola which will meet the security concerns of all the parties and pave the way for internationally recognised independence for Namibia, in accordance with the terms of Security Council resolution 435.

South Africa (Treason Trial)

75. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has sought the permission of the South African Government to send observers to the treason trial of members of the United Democratic Front.

Mr. Rifkind: We do not require permission to attend a public trial. As I explained in a written answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Duffy) on 20 February 1985, we expect to send an observer [Vol. 73, c. 466.]

Central America

76. Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in central America.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing further to add to the reply my hon. Friend the Member for Pentlands Edinburgh, (Mr. Rifkind) gave to the hon. Member on 20 March.—[Vol. 75, c. 525.]

Malta (Sunken Wartime Vessels)

78. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any recent discussions have taken place between the Foreign Office and Malta regarding the raising of sunken wartime vessels in the vicinity of Grand harbour.

Mr. Renton: There have for some time been exchanges with the Maltese Government on the question of the possible clearance of certain wrecks and unexploded ordnance from these waters. These exchanges are continuing.

EC (Spain and Portugal)

80. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the accession of Spain and Portugal will have on decisions taken by the Council of Ministers by qualified majority.

Mr. Rifkind: Spain and Portugal will participate in any voting in the Council in accordance with the rules laid down in the treaties. The accession treaty, which will be laid before the House, will set out the number of votes on the basis of the relative sizes of the acceding states. The intention is that article 148 of the treaty will be amended to give eight votes to Spain and five to Portugal, raising the number of votes in the Council from 63 to 76. The qualified majority will go from 45 to 54.

Arms Talks

81. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the Soviet reaction to the latest proposals put by the British Government at the Geneva negotiations on chemical weapons.

Mr. Luce: The detailed proposals I introduced on 12 March 1985, the latest in a series of United Kingdom working papers on the non-diversion of industrial chemicals into secret military stockpiles, have aroused considerable interest in the Socialist group at the Geneva chemical weapons negotiations. Its considered reactions are awaited.

Kuwait (Ministerial Visit)

82. Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement upon the recent visit of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce), to Kuwait.

Mr. Luce: Between 31 March and 2 April, I visited Kuwait as part of a Gulf tour which also included Qatar. I had a very useful round of discussions with Kuwaiti Ministers, including the Crown Prince and Prime Minister, Sheikh Sa'ad. I was able to review the satisfactory state of our bilateral relations and exchange views on major international issues, including the Iran-Iraq conflict, and Lebanon and the Arab-Israel dispute.

Chile

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Chile.

Mr. Renton: We maintain normal diplomatic relations with Chile, but regularly make known our concern about human rights violations. Following the Chilean earthquake on 3 March, we have given £250,000 of disaster relief through non-governmental organisations to help those made homeless.

East Germany (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his visit to East Germany.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I visited East Berlin and the German Democratic Republic from 8 to 10 April. I had talks with senior GDR Government figures, and met a wide cross-section of GDR society. I discussed East-West relations and arms control with Mr. Erich Honecker and the Foreign Minister. I made clear the West's sincere determination to achieve greater security for all at a lower level of weapons, through balanced and verifiable agreements. I indicated the strength of our concern for human rights, including the freedom to travel. We also discussed the prospects for an increase in bilateral trade.

EC (Subsidised Food and Wine)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to withhold approval of any proposals in the Council of Ministers to increase the resources of the Common Market until that organisation agrees to refrain from the policy of selling food and wine to the Soviet Union at subsidised prices.

Mr. Rifkind: The Council of Ministers agreed in March a draft new own resources text which incorporates in Community legislation the agreement reached by Heads of Government at Fontainebleau last year. Parliamentary approval will be sought in due course for the introduction of new own resources in this way.

The Soviet Union, like any other third country, is free to buy agricultural exports from the Community at world prices. We remain opposed to any specially favourable arrangements for the Soviet Union.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

83. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards encouraging British companies towards further investment in South Africa.

Mr. Channon: The Government believe that decisions on investment in South Africa, as in other countries, are best left to the commercial judgements of the companies concerned.

Cars (Mileage Clocks)

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce legislation to make it an illegal practice to zero car mileage clocks.

Mr. Fletcher: I have no plans at present to do so.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in the average value of imports and exports of manufactures since 1980 compared with the increase in unit values.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

Manufactures (SITC Rev2 5-8)

	Percentage change 1980-1984
Exports
Unit Value Index	+35
Average Value Index	+32
Imports
Unit Value Index	+37
Average Value Index	+31

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what factors he attributes the smaller increase in the unit value of imports of semi-manufactures less chemicals since 1980 compared with the period before 1980.

Mr. Channon: The smaller increase in recent years is largely attributable to silver bullion and other non-ferrous metals; the unit value index for these commodities rose at an average annual rate of 2·5 per cent in the period from 1980 to 1984 compared with an average annual rise of nearly 33 per cent between 1978 and 1980.

Consumer Durables (Exports)

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to which geographical areas Her Majesty's Government attach the highest priority in their overseas trade policy for the next two years with specific reference to exports of consumer durable goods.

Mr. Channon: There are opportunities for sales of consumer durable goods in a wide range of countries, particularly the OECD countries. Firms need to take account of the price, performance, and type of goods before deciding where the best prospects lie. Where particularly good opportunities arise my Department and the Diplomatic Service Posts overseas work with the industry to exploit them. The task force for Do-It-Yourself goods in Italy is a recent successful example. The accession of Spain and Portugal to the Community will create new opportunities and a special programme is being mounted to help industry pursue exports in these countries.

Electronic Companies (Bankruptcies)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many electronics companies with a work force of fewer than 40 employees have gone bankrupt in the last 12 months.

Mr. Fletcher: I regret that figures are not available by size of company nor by detailed industries. Electronics companies are included in the broad category of "metals and engineering" and the article on insolvencies to be published in 'British business' on 26 April will show that 1,338 companies in this category in England and Wales went into liquidation due to insolvency in 1984. The number of bankruptcies of individuals and partnerships in the same broad category in 1984 will be available shortly and will be published in 'British business'; a provisional estimate for January/September 1984 is 54.

Battery-powered Dog Collars

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to ban the import of battery-powered dog collars which deliver an electric shock when the dog barks.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Censorship

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the Government's response to the report of the study group on censorship.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government's response is being published today—Cmnd. 9499. I should like to record once more the Government's thanks to General Sir Hugh Beach and to his colleagues for their valuable support.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members's Correspondence

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, whether, pursuant to his reply on 1 April, he will set out in the Official Report details subsequently communicated to the hon. Member for Leicester, East.

Mr. Beith: There are a total of 847 staff employed by the Commission, including 163 part-time workers, entitled to receive additional payment if they work hours in excess of normal; 431 such staff received additional payments for a varying number of extra hours in week ending 22

February 1985, including 208 staff in receipt of regular extra payments in the form of annual allowances calculated on the basis of the average hours of sitting of the House over the previous five years. The employment of additional staff for the hours covered by these payments would in most cases be uneconomic and impracticable because, for example, of the unpredictable times to which the House and Committees often sit; and accordingly there are no reliable assumptions on which to base an estimate of the number that would be required.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Higgins asked the Lord Privy Seal what information he has on provision made to fund overseas travel on official duties by (a) individual members and (b) Select Committees or their equivalent in the lower Houses of Commonwealth and European Parliaments and the United States House of Representatives; and if he will set out in the Official Report the level of resources made available to them in the latest period for which figures can be ascertained.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested is not held centrally for all Parliaments. I have, however, obtained some information from a variety of sources which is as follows. I must stress, however, that this information is not in a homogeneous form:

1. Canada
Committee travel overseas has to be specifically authorised by a Vote in the House of Commons. Most overseas travel is made under the auspices of one of the seven Parliamentary Associations which have their own annual grants from appropriations of both Houses.

2. India
There is some provision for overseas travel at the discretion of the Authorities of the House.

3. New Zealand
Cabinet approval is required for overseas travel, which is funded by the Department of Internal Affairs. The cost of such travel in 1983-84 was $84,566.

4. Belgium*
At the discretion of the Bureau for travel abroad.

5. Denmark*
At the discretion of the Bureau (presidium) in as much as it decides whether the travelling expenses shall be paid and provided for in the Budget of the Folketing.

6. Germany*
At the discretion of the President.

7. France*
At the discretion of the relevant Bureau subject to a ceiling of seven Members in the case of journeys within Europe and five Members in the cases of other journeys abroad. The number of participants is irrelevant for journeys abroad during Sessions.

8. Ireland*
Authorisation for travel can be given.

9. Italy*
At the discretion of the President.

10. Luxembourg*
Authorisation for travel can be given.

11. Holland*
At the discretion of the relevant Bureau.

12. United Kingdom
At the discretion of the Liaison Committee.

13. United States of America
Congress Members can usually undertake foreign travel on Committee business or by Executive request or appointment. Members are required by law to make public annually the cost of such official trips, which are funded by the public purse. During 1980, 219 Members of Congress took 346 trips abroad at Government expense. The trips by Members and their Committee staff cost a total of $2,803,966·85.

* Our source material on these countries does not distinguish between travel at home and travel abroad.

Personal Taxation

Sir William Clark asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will propose the setting up of a Select Committee to consider the Green Paper on personal taxation to be issued in the autumn.

Mr. Biffen: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion and will give it full consideration in due course.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. A. W. Blakestone

Mr. McNamara asked the Prime Minister what reply she has sent to the letter of Mr. A. W. Blakestone of 46 Appleton road, Buckhill avenue, Kingston upon Hull, in which he suggested that to mark the 40th anniversary of VE Day and VJ Day people who saw active service in that war should be able to take statutory retirement a year early for each year of service to a maximum of five years with a view to releasing their jobs for the unemployed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Blakestone's letter was passed to the Ministry of Defence for action and an official reply was sent on 5 March 1985. This set out the Government's plans for the commemoration of the 40th anniversary of the end of the Second World War, in accordance with my statement of 14 February 1985.—[Vol. 61, c. 230.] I have asked my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces to write to the hon. Member with a copy of the letter to Mr. Blakestone.

EC (Subsidised Food and Wine)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to oppose the sale, at subsidised prices, of food and wine to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe; and what powers are available to Her Majesty's Government in the various Councils of Ministers to seek to achieve this objective.

The Prime Minister: I will reply to my hon. Friend shortly.

Young People (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 16 April, Official Report, column 136, she has any information as to further plans for young people in Liverpool to come out on strike and leave their schools; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I totally deplore and condemn this thoroughly mischievous attempt by Left-wing groups in Liverpool to hide behind children in expressing any concerns they may feel about the youth training scheme. This is the worst possible example they could give youngsters on Merseyside. The call to strike will be seen by all reasonably minded people as a clear political act of a totally negative nature. Is this really the image of Merseyside that should be projected to the industrialists of the world?

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Communications System)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will identify where the responsibility lies for servicing the public communications system at service stations on the M1 between London and Leeds;

(2) if he will identify where responsibility lies for servicing the public communications system at service stations on the M62 between Liverpool and Goole;

(3) if he will identify where responsibility lies for servicing the public communications system at service stations on the A1(M) between Hatfield and Newcastle.

Mrs. Chalker: Operators of motorway service areas in England are required by their leases to provide at all times a number of public telephones, except when temporarily prevented by circumstances outside their control.

Marques (Loss)

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will hold a formal investigation into the loss of the sailing vessel Marques near Bermuda in June 1984.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. In view of the public concern over the loss of this vessel and the loss of life I am taking the necessary measures for the holding of a public formal investigation into the circumstances of this casualty.

Helicopter Safety

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the crew of commercial helicopters will be required at all times whilst on board to wear lifejackets incorporating dual frequency (121·5 and 243Mhz) personal locater beacons, in line with the safety recommendations of the inspector of aircraft accident report 8/84 on the accident involving British Airways' helicopter S-61N, G-BEON, in the sea near the Isles of Scilly.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 15 April 1985, c. 54]: Existing lifejackets can be uncomfortable to wear and cause fatigue, especially in hot weather or when used in conjunction with immersion suits. A new type of lifejacket is being developed and is likely to be comfortable enough to wear on the majority of occasions.

All offshore operators equip their flight crew with personal location beacons which operate on 121·5 and 243 Mhz, as required by ICAO, and an amendment to the Air Navigation Order 1980 will require all public transport helicoptors and gyroplanes from 3 March 1986 to carry automatically deployable emergency beacons transmitting simultaneously on both those frequencies.

At present, the CAA do not insist that helicopter crews should wear lifejackets at all times, because existing jackets can be uncomfortable and tiring in hot weather, or with an immersion suit.

Additionally, the Air Navigation Order 1980 will be amended to require all public transport helicopters and gyroplanes to be equipped with automatically deployable emergency beacons from 3 March 1986.

ENVIRONMENT

Gleneagles Agreement

84. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government will take to strengthen the operation of the Gleneagles agreement.

Mr. Macfarlane: None. The Government fully implement the requirements of the Commonwealth statement on apartheid in sport.

Foreign Office (Energy Audit)

85. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange an energy audit for all offices of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office within the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: Building and sites are selected for energy audit on the basis of the anticipated profitability of resultant energy savings. Capital must be available to implement the recommendations of the audits.

The buildings currently occupied by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, although substantial in number, form only a small proportion of the whole of the United Kindgom Property Services Agency maintained estate.

Selection of buildings for audit is not made on the basis of the occupying Department and, given the constraints of available resources, it would not be appropriate for me to arrange for energy audits of all FCO offices or indeed, all the offices of any other single Government Department.

Thamesmead Advisory Group

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from the Thamesmead Advisory Group; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have recently received a helpful list of questions about future arrangements for a trust for Thamesmead, from community representatives including the Thamesmead advisory group. I have responded in writing and shall discuss the issues with them on 25 April.

Anti-fouling Paints

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has made of the effect on the environment of marine anti-fouling paints, other than those which are organo-tin based, if his proposed ban on organo-tin anti-fouling were to be implemented;

(2) what meetings concerning anti-fouling paints Ministers in his Department have had with representatives of (a) users of anti-fouling paints, (b) manufacturers of anti-fouling paints, (c) shellfish growers and (d) other interested parties;

(3) if he will give figures for the total number of pleasure craft, including motor boats and yachts (a) 12 m and below in length and (b) above 12 m in length;

(4) if he will list the concentrations of tributyl-tin oxide in the natural environment at each location where either the Pacific oyster or the native British oyster is cultivated or fished for as many years since 1955 as records permit;

(5) what volume of tributyl-tin oxide is estimated to leak into the environemt annually from anti-fouling the hulls of (a) private vessels less than 12 m in length, (b) private vessels above 12 m in length, (c) merchant ships, (d) naval vessels, (e) fishing boats less than 12 m in length and (f) fishing boats above 12 m in length;

(6) what types of anti-fouling paint would be available to yachtsmen and fishermen with vessels below 12 m in length if his proposed regulations on the use of tributyl-tin oxide become law.

Mr. Viggers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what alternatives to tributyl-tin oxide are available to the manufacturers and users of anti-fouling paints; and what their effects on the natural environment would be.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply to the question put to my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

All anti-fouling agents work by making the surface to which they are applied unsuitable for the marine organisms which try to settle and grow there. Organo-tin based paints act by the continuous release of organo-tin compounds which are toxic to such organisms. They are also toxic to other marine organisms. Scientists at the Government's fisheries laboratory have measured the concentration of tributyl-tin oxide at sites where the Pacific and the native British oysters are cultivated and at some other sites around the coast. The results were obtained over the period 1982 to 1984. No information is available prior to 1982. The results are summarised in a short paper, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

If the draft regulations on which comments are currently being sought were introduced without change, yachtsmen and others would be able to use any anti-fouling paint not prescribed by the regulations. The most likely alternatives are formulations based on copper, with or without small quantities of organo-tin compounds. Copper-based formulations have been available and have been widely used for many years without giving rise to concern on environmental grounds.

Information is not available on the amount of tributyl-tin oxide released into the environment annually from anti-fouling paint used on different categories of vessel. The Government's intention in proposing regulations is to protect the marine environment, particularly the shallow estuarial and inshore areas which are often very rich in marine life and important nursery areas and sometimes support valuable commercial fisheries. Where there are large numbers of small craft moored for long periods in shallow waters with insufficient water exchange, then tributyl-tin compounds leached from anti-fouling paints can reach dangerous concentrations. By preventing the sale and use of such paints on small pleasure craft this danger can be prevented. The proposed regulations are accordingly aimed specifically at small pleasure craft. The 12 m cut-off point was chosen, for the purpose of consultation, following an analysis of the export and import statistics which indicated that this length would encompass about 80 per cent. of the relevant category of boat.

I met representatives of the shell-fish growers on 4 February at their request and representatives of the Paintmakers Association on 22 April. There have been no such requests from either the users of anti-fouling paints or from other interested parties. The paint manufacturers and boating interests have also had several meetings with my officials.

Nitrates

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress water authorities are making in reducing nitrate levels to comply with the EEC directive of a 50 mg per litre maximum;

(2) which water authorities currently have nitrate in drinking water in excess of 50 mg per litre;

(3) what surface waters have concentrations of nitrate in excess of 50 mg per litre; and by how much they have increased in recent years.

Mr. Macfarlane: In 1984, some water supplies in Anglian, Severn-Trent, Yorkshire and Thames water authority areas exceeded 50 mg per litre NO_3 for some part of the year. In these areas steps have been or are being taken to reduce nitrate concentrations in drinking water. All the authorities will need to comply with the EC directive figure of 50 mg per litre or with the terms of any derogation I may issue later this year.

My Department's harmonised monitoring scheme, using data collected by water authorities, provides a comprehensive picture of the nitrate situation in the main rivers in England, Scotland and Wales. In 1983, of over 200 monitoring stations, only five recorded average nitrate concentrations slightly above 50 mg per litre.

These stations are situated on the Rivers Lee, Blackwater, Idle, Stour (Suffolk) and Stour (Hereford and Worcester).

Until 1980 nitrate concentrations had been increasing on average by 0·7 mg per litre annually in some 25 rivers. More recent information is now being assessed by the nitrate co-ordination group.

Planning Applications

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision in respect of planning application Nos. APP/F5540/A/83/8188/9 and APP/5540/A/54/14820 held at a public inquiry before his inspector, Kenneth Jeremiah, in August-September 1984.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend is considering the inspector's report and a decision will be issued as soon as possible.

Subsidised House Purchases (Wapping)

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money the London Docklands Development Corporation has set aside for subsidising house purchases in Wapping; and how the scheme proposed by the London Docklands Development Corporation will work.

Sir George Young: The London Docklands Development Corporation has set aside £1 million for its equity share loan scheme in Wapping. Under the scheme, a loan of up to £10,000 is available to residents of the Wapping part of docklands to top up a conventional mortgage for a house in that area. This is normally repayable to the corporation on the resale of the property or after ten years. After ten years, the position may be reviewed at the discretion of the corporation in the light of the applicant's circumstances. No interest is charged on the loan and no rent is levied on the corporation's share of the equity.

The amount to be repaid is to be the same proportion of the resale price or the market value of the property as was the original loan of the purchase price, subject to a cost floor and a cost ceiling.

Itinerants

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many places on permanent sites in England and Wales are currently provided for itinerants.

Mr. Macfarlane: In January 1985 there were 232 gipsy sites run by local authorities in England providing 3,753 pitches. In addition, the count made by local authorities in July 1984 showed that some 1,748 gipsy caravans were camped on authorised private pitches. The figures for Wales can be obtained from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the best estimate available for the total itinerant population in England and Wales.

Mr. Macfarlane: The available information relates to caravans rather than population. In July 1984 there were 9,627 gipsy caravans in England. The figures for Wales can be obtained from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

REEMA Conclad Houses

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any undertaking from the Building Societies Association that it will advise its member societies that REEMA conclad houses have no known generic defects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: In my reply to my hon. Friend of 20 February, column 485, I said that my Department hoped to have further discussions with the Building Societies Association on the condition of dwellings of non-traditional design generally. These discussions are continuing. I will make a statement as soon as possible.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the operation of close-ending under the rate support grant systems.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Rate support grant is based on authorities' expenditure, but the total amount of rate support grant paid out in any year can only be the amount approved by the House of Commons. As a matter of routine, every year my Department notifies each local authority at the end of March of the grant to which it is initially entitled in the forthcoming year, on the basis of authorities' own estimates of expenditure. That process involves making an adjustment, called close-ending, from the figures published the previous December to ensure that the total of payments is in line with the authorised total.

Close-ending is not a new principle. Under the former RSG system, prior to 1981-82, the resources element of grant was close-ended each year to match the grant claimed by authorities to the total grant available. Indeed, the extent of close-ending in 1978-79, the last full year of the last Labour Government, was significantly higher than the 1·5 per cent. being applied in 1985-86. This means that under the former RSG arrangements particular authorities' grant entitlements could and did change to a greater extent than the close-ending recently announced for 1985-86.

Suggestions that either the timing or the substance of this year's announcement were in any way unusual are therefore unfounded and political mischiefmaking.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Bursaries

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of university postgraduate courses which had a reduction in their bursary allocations in each single year since the 1978-79 academic session and those whose grants have been totally abolished during the same period.

Mr. Brooke: Allocations of bursaries to universities and other postgraduate institutions by the Department were reduced in 1981-82 in respect of 30 courses included in the state bursary scheme. In the years prior to that year and in subsequent years no significant reductions in the allocations occurred. Since 1978-79 the allocation of bursaries for three courses have been withdrawn; the bursaries released were reallocated to other courses.

Primary Schools (Science Teaching)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to enable primary school teachers to improve science teaching in primary schools; and what resources he intends to allocate for this purpose.

Mr. Dunn: The Department and the Welsh Office have recently published "Science 5-16: A statement of policy", which sets out the Government's views on future developments in science education in primary and secondary schools. It sets as objectives that all pupils should be properly introduced to science in the primary school and that all class teachers in primary schools, without exception, should include at least some science in their teaching, making use of their colleagues' specialist knowledge and experience as necessary.

The policy statement calls for a sustained and co-operative effort under the leadership of the LEAs to meet those objectives, and describes some of the action being taken at the national level to assist that effort. For example, primary science is to be one of the areas within the education support grant scheme. Fifty-two LEAs in England will receive education support grant from September 1985 to support three-year programmes of action to improve the effectiveness and relevance of primary science teaching. Total expenditure in these LEAs over the three years will be some £10 million, and an extension of the primary science education support grant scheme in 1986-87 is under consideration. The Association for Science Education is being commissioned to undertake an evaluation of the primary science ESG programmes, to disseminate information about successful practice and to draw up guidelines for future developments. Primary science is also one of the fields receiving support under the inservice teacher training grants scheme. These and other developments at the national level are matched by substantial and rapidly growing interest at the local level, with many significant initiatives under way.

Special Needs

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals he has received under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 in the 12 months ended 31 March; if he will (a) list the local education authorities concerned and give the number of appeals against each authority and (b) state in how many instances he has (i) confirmed the special educational provision specified in the statement, (ii) amended the statement and (iii) directed the local education authority to cease to maintain a statement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Appeals under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 received during the period 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985

LEA	Number of appeals	Statement confirmed	Statement amended	Not yet decided

My right hon. Friend has issued no directions to cease to maintain a statement under section 8(7)(c) of the Act.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals he has received under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 in the 12 months ended 31 March; if he will (a) list the local education authorities concerned and give the number of appeals against each authority, (b) state in how many instances he has upheld the decision of the local education authority and (c) state in how many instances he has directed the local education authority to reconsider its decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Appeals under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 during the period 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985

LEA	Number of appeals	LEA decision upheld	Not yet decided

My right hon. Friend has issued no directions to local education authorities to reconsider their decisions not to approve a statement of special educational needs. In two instances, however (Oxfordshire and Solihuil), the local education authority have agreed to reconsider their decision following informal discussions with the Department.

Exchange Teachers (United States)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the position of teachers on exchange in the United States.

Mr. Brooke: Apart from 10 parliamentary questions, I have received 33 representations from 28 people, including eight hon. Members and the embassy of the United States of America in London.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the number of applications for teacher exchanges with the United States in each of the last five years.

Mr. Brooke: The number of applications from British teachers, and the results of the applications, are given below. Those for 1985-86 are as yet only provisional.

Year	England & Wales		Scotland		Northern Ireland		Totals
	Applications	Appointments Made	Applications	Appointments Made	Applications	Appointments Made	Applications	Appointments Made
1981-82	317	130	54	19	7	1	378	150
1982-83	265	122	53	27	10	4	328	153

1985-86	265	100	31	13	11	6	307	119

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to change the system of payment of allowance to British teachers taking part in the teacher exchanges with the United States to take account of fluctuations in the exchange rate.

Mr. Brooke: None. Fluctuations in the exchange rate are already taken into consideration in the payment of allowances to British teachers taking part in teacher exchanges with the United States of America.

School Leavers

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance will be issued by his Department to schools in respect of the possible entitlement to supplementary benefit of Easter school leavers who return to school to sit public examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Advice on eligibility for supplementary benefit is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services to provide.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children who left school at Easter in 1984 returned to school in order to sit public examinations in the 1984 summer term.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested for 1984 is not available. An estimated 8,500 school leavers who had reached the minimum school leaving age in 1982-83, left school by Easter 1983 and subsequently attempted at least one of the Summer 1983 CSE/GCE examinations.

Mathematics

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish Her Majesty's inspectorate's paper on the mathematics curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: "Mathematics from 5 to 16" is published today. In the three years since the publication of the Crockcroft report the Government have based their action to improve the quality of mathematics teaching in schools on the report's conclusions. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I welcome the publication of HM Inspectorate's paper, which reflects and develops the Cockcroft committee's recommendations. It is particularly appropriate that the paper should be published at a time when almost all LEAs are preparing for the appointment, under the education support grant scheme, of additional mathematics advisers and advisory teachers. Some 350 such staff are due to begin work in September 1985; their task will be to encourage changes in mathematics education in primary and secondary schools along the lines proposed by the Cockcroft committee.

Following the pattern of other papers in the HMI series "Curriculum Matters", the paper sets out views, and seeks comment, on the aims and objectives of mathematics teaching and on the related professional issues of the principles of mathematics teaching and the assessment of pupils' progress in mathematics. We commend it for the consideration of all those concerned with the development of children's competence in mathematics. We believe that it will help to develop effective teaching approaches. We also regard it as an important contribution towards the development of agreement on the objectives of this key subject in the school curriculum.

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made by the committee of inquiry into the academic validation of degree courses in the public sector of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The report of the committee of inquiry into the academic validation of public sector degree courses was published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and I are most grateful to the members of the committee of inquiry and particulary to its chairman, Sir Norman Lindop, for the time and effort they have devoted to the inquiry, and for the speed with which they have completed a difficult task. The Government attach great importance to the maintenance and improvement of academic standards throughout the education system, and we will study the committee's report with care and interest.

My right hon. Friends and I will consult a number of interested bodies concerning the report's conclusions and recommendations. We will also welcome comments from any institution, organisation or individual not specifically consulted. Following these consultations, the Government will aim to reach their decisions on the recommendations made in the report as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Disabled People (Assistance)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each region who received assistance with the provision of aids in 1983-84;

(2) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each region who received assistance with adaptations to the home in 1983-84;

(3) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each region who received assistance with the installation of telephones in 1983-84;

(4) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each region who received assistance with the payment of telephone rentals in 1983-84;

(5) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each region who received assistance with holidays in 1983-84.

Mr. John MacKay: Provisional figures are contained in the following table:

Long-term Care

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps he is taking to encourage the development of more appropriate forms of long-term care.

Mr. Younger: A draft circular issued for consultation last July set out proposed new arrangements for the joint planning and support finance scheme. The main objective of those proposals was to encourage more effective co-ordination of efforts to achieve a better balance between hospital and community care, and the development of more appropriate forms of long-term care.

I am grateful to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, health boards and other interested organisations for their general support for that objective, and their helpful comments on those proposals. The circular, with consequential revisions, was issued today; I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Forestry Commission has for aerial spraying of pesticides as part of forestry operations in the current year.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1985, c. 249]: Subject to clearances under the pesticides safety precautions scheme, the Forestry Commission, together with private woodland owners, is planning to carry out in late May and early June programmes of ultra low-volume aerial spraying of insecticides on some 7,000 hectares of Lodgepole pine plantations in Sutherland, Easter Ross, Argyll and Perthshire. This spraying is to control two forest insect pests—pine beauty moth using fenitrothion and pine sawfly using virox.

The commission also intends to spray from the air about 50 hectares of land in east Scotland and 230 hectares of land in the west of England with azulam, which is a herbicide for the control of bracken and which has full commercial clearance under the pesticides safety precautions scheme. In addition, the commission will be seeking agreement to the aerial spraying with glyphosate of up to 500 hectares of land; this will be under the limited clearance which has been granted to Monsanto Limited under the pesticides safety precautions scheme. Glyphosate is used for general weed control.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Forestry Commission or any other statutory authority undertake any monitoring of, or grant approval for, the aerial spraying of pesticides on forest land in the private sector.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1985, c. 249]: An owner of forest land is not required at present to seek statutory approval for the aerial spraying of his land with pesticides; he is required, however, to obtain clearance under the pesticides safety precautions scheme for the use of the particular pesticide, unless he proposes to use azulam for the control of bracken. The flight operator must hold an aerial application certificate issued by the Civil Aviation Authority.

WALES

Disabled People (Assistance)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each local authority who received assistance with holidays in 1983-84.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

Social services: assistance with holidays

Local Authority	Cases receiving assistance with holidays*	Rate per 1,000 population
Clwyd	120	0·3
Dyfed	—	—

Local Authority	Cases receiving assistance with holidays*	Rate per 1,000 population

† This figure includes telephone installations, attachments installed and rentals paid; other communication equipment installed; television installations, licence fees or rentals paid; radio sets supplied; other personal aids.

Cattle (Headage Payments)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate how many farmers in (a) Dyfed and (b) the Carmarthen constituency would benefit if headage payments for the first 20 cows were to be allowed in the less favoured areas of these localities.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Hill livestock compensatory allowance under article 15(1)(a) of EC regulation 797/85 on the first 20 dairy cows per eligible farmer would benefit some 2,500 farmers in Dyfed. A breakdown to give a figure for part of the county could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Greater London Council (Arson Attack)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the progress of investigations into the arson attack on Room 686A at the Greater London council recently; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that in the early evening of 26

March a fire caused considerable damage to Room 686A at county hall. An investigation into the incident, which is being treated as arson, is led by a senior detective and is continuing.

Police (Overtime)

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact on the effectiveness of police investigations in the metropolitan area of recent reductions in overtime worked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police estimates for 1985-86 which my right hon. and learned Friend approved earlier this year contain provision for £58 million for police overtime payments compared with an outturn of about £55 million in 1984-85, excluding overtime worked in connection with the miners' dispute. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has introduced a new system, which comes into effect on 1 April this year, under which each deputy assistant commissioner in charge of an area or department is given an annual overtime allocation which he may distribute to the districts or branches under his command as necessary according to operational priorities. This is in line with the Commissioner's goal of ensuring the most effective, efficient and economical use of available resources.

The overriding principle in authorising overtime will continue to be that no overtime should be worked unless a failure to do so would lead to a loss in operational efficiency.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will introduce legislation to provide that communications intercepted via a microphone placed within the physical structure of a public telephone booth, but not within the telephone itself, require a ministerial warrant;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to provide that communications intercepted via a microphone placed in the mouthpiece of a public telephone require a ministerial warrant.

Mr. Brittan: The Government have introduced legislation on the interception of communications in the course of their transmission by means of a public telecommunications system. The legislation provides a system of ministerial authorisation for the interception of such communications by whatever means, and any interception outside the requirements of the Bill will be a criminal offence. Beyond that, as I explained during the Second Reading of the Bill, 12 March, column 156-57, the Government consider that the approach adopted by the Law Commission in its report on breach of confidence —October 1981, Cmnd. 8388—is the appropriate one, and I announced that the Government intend to introduce legislation based on its proposals, under which there would be a right of civil action against anyone who used or disclosed information obtained by "improper means", including the surreptitious use of a surveillance device. I also reminded the House that the Home Office guidelines on the use of equipment in police surveillance operations a copy of which was placed in the Library of 19 December 1984, rule out any attempt to use a listening devise as a means of circumventing the controls over authorised interception.

Siege (Leyton)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to the answer of 15 April, Official Report, column 13, about the siege in Lea Bridge Road, Leyton, on 2 April, if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to indicate (a) how many police officers were present at this siege and (b) how many of them were armed or had access to arms.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that 27 officers were deployed, of whom 11 were issued with firearms.

Police (Emergencies)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of police service work is involved in dealing with emergencies; and how this is reflected in current pay levels.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All aspects of police work are reflected in the present rates of pay. It would not be practicable to try to assess the proportion of police time spent in dealing with emergencies of various kinds.

Metropolitan Police (Services)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what payments have been received by the Metropolitan police from each of the London Football League clubs for police services, to the most convenient date in the season 1984-85.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the information requested is as follows:

Payments received by the Metropolitan Police for police services at matches played during the football season 1984-85 to 19 April 1985

	Payments £
Arsenal	79,000·73
Brentford	19,596·80
Charlton Athletic	15,205·96
Chelsea	127,139·82
Crystal Palace	14,400·96
Fulham	14,219·39
Milwall	27,078·91
Orient	6,660·63
Queens Park Rangers	51,322·58
Tottenham Hotspur	114,181·94
West Ham United	66,384·71
Wimbledon	17,875·15

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further progress has been made with appointments to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Brittan: I have already announced the appointment of the right hon. Roland Moyle and Rear Admiral John Bell as full-time deputy chairmen of the new authority under Sir Cecil Clothier's chairmanship.

I am glad to announce the following have accepted my offer of appointment as full-time members of the authority:

Mr. Vernon Clements
Mrs. Eva Crawley
Mr. Maurice Hazelwood
Mr. John Lyttle
Mr. Vincent Moore
Brigadier John Pownall
Captain Noel Taylor (MN)
Mrs. Rosemary Vickers
Mrs. Rosemary Wolff

The authority will start work on 29 April. I expect to appoint one further additional member shortly.

ENERGY

North Sea Oil

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of exports of products derived from North sea crude oil expressed as a percentage of North sea crude production in each year since 1979.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The United Kingdom refinery industry uses a mixture of North sea and other crude oils in refinery operations. Petroleum products are thus derived from a complex process of mixing, refining and blending, of which North sea crude oils are a major component. Total United Kingdom product exports by weight expressed as a percentage of total crude production since 1979 are as follows:

Product Exports as Percentage of United Kingdom Crude Oil Production

Year	Percentage
1979	17·4
1980	18·5
1981	14·5
1982	13·5
1983	13·2
1984	11·8

Source: Energy trends, March 1985, Table 11.
Note: These figures include a very small amount of United Kingdom non-North sea crude.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of obligatory wells required as conditions in the allocation of licences in rounds 1 to 5; and what so far has been the number actually drilled.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The position, round by round, is:

Licensing Round	Obligatory Wells (firm & conditional)	Obligatory Wells Drilled
1	98	92
2	45	37
3	49	37
4	225	174
5	52	33

The period within which the obligatory wells have to be drilled has not yet been completed for all fifth round licences.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the amount of North sea crude oil refined in Britain each year since 1980; and if he will express that amount as a percentage of North sea crude oil production.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The amounts of North sea crude oil refined in Britain since 1980 were as follows —all figures in million tonnes—

	Million Tonnes
1980	39·84
1981	37·77
1982	40·29
1983	44·82
1984	*45·35

* Provisional.

The amounts of North sea crude oil refined in Britain as a percentage of North sea crude oil production are as follows:

	Percentage
1980	50·5
1981	42·9
1982	40·2
1983	40·5
1984	37·4

Petrochemicals

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost to the balance of payments of the import of refined petrochemical products in each year since 1975; and if he will express that as a percentage of total imports.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The value of imports of refined and semi-refined petroleum products is given below:

	Value (£m)	Value as percentage of total visible imports
1975	699	2·9
1976	930	3·0
1977	968	2·7
1978	998	2·4
1979	1,550	3·2
1980	1,802	3·6
1981	2,123	4·1
1982	2,326	4·1
1983	2,423	3·7
*1984	4,231	5·4

* Provisional; All figures include process oils which are used in the United Kingdom as a refinery feedstock.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons were employed in the Civil Service at the most recent available date in Scotland and the United Kingdom, respectively; and what were the comparable figures for the same date in 1979.

Mr. Lawson: The following table shows the staff of the Home Civil Service and the diplomatic service employed in Scotland and the rest of the United Kingdom in January 1979 and January 1985. Staff of the Northern Ireland Civil Service are excluded.

*Civil servants in Scotland and elsewhere in the United Kingdom

	January 1979	January 1985
Scotland	70,800	†64,700
Elsewhere	662,400	†554,900
TOTAL UNITED KINGDOM	733,200	†619,600

* Full-time equivalents.
† Figures are provisional at present.

Subsidised Nursery Places (Tax)

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Inland Revenue intends to recover tax for back years from those in receipt of the benefit of an employer subsidised nursery place.

Mr. Moore: In law, the benefit of an employer subsidised nursery place has been taxable on directors and those employees currently earning at a rate of £8,500 a year since the legislation was first enacted in 1948. This is in common with most other benefits in kind. Although the Board of Inland Revenue cannot take responsibility for the content of the wide variety of published material on taxation matters, it is conscious that the mistaken advice given in the Equal Opportunities Commission manual and the Which? Tax Saving Guide may have misled many employees whose children attended such nurseries. The board recognises that such employees may have suffered uncertainty and anxiety because of this mistaken advice. In these exceptional circumstances and because of the hardship that might result if the tax due for back years was collected, the board has decided that it would not be appropriate to seek to recover tax for periods before 6 April 1985. This decision will be given the usual publicity and a copy of an Inland Revenue press release announcing its terms will be placed in the Library.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of revenue forgone in 1984-85, both before and after corporation and income taxes, in consequence of the rating exemptions and reliefs on agricultural land.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Exchange Rate

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the changes in the exchange rate of the pound sterling to the dollar and in the minimum lending rate since he presented his Budget on 19 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 373]: Between 19 March and 19 April 1985, sterling appreciated 14 per cent. against the dollar from $1·1360 to $1·2937. The Bank of England ceased to post a continuous minimum lending rate on 20 August 1981, and no minimum lending rate has been posted since the Budget. Bank base rates have fallen from 14 per cent. on 19 March to between 12½ and 12¾ per cent. on 19 April.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount by which Britain's net contribution to the European Economic Community in future years under the Fontainebleau arrangements will be increased or decreased if the proposal by the European Economic Community Commission dated 21 February to exclude from allocated expenditure a number of items in addition to the exclusion of development aid is adopted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985, c. 428]: The Commission's proposals are in fact intended to show the gradual inclusion of items in the allocated budget, rather than their exclusion from it. The effect on the United Kingdom's net controbutions to the EC budget of the Commission's proposed definition of allocated expenditure depends on the amount of the excluded expenditure which would, if allocation were possible, be allocated to the United Kingdom. There is no way of knowing what this cost would be.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of the United Kingdom rebate under the Fontainebleau formula which will be delayed until the next year in consequence of the proposal by the European Economic Community Commission dated 21 February to base the United Kingdom's abatement on a provisional or preliminary calculation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985, c. 428]: The Commission's proposal to base the United Kingdom's abatement on the figures available when the preliminary draft budget is drawn up simply recognises the realities of the situation. The figures must be calculated in this way if the abatement is to be included in the budget so as to apply from 1 January of the following year. The figures that will be involved will depend entirely on particular circumstances: it is impossible to estimate them in advance, and as is always the case they could differ from them in either direction.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report the various items of expenditure by the European Economic Community which the Commission proposes in its communication dated 21 February should be excluded from allocated expenditure in addition to development aid in relation to the calculation of the United Kingdom's abatement under the Fontainebleau arrangements; and if it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government that a detailed and comprehensive list of such items should be determined before the final own-resources decision is approved by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985 c. 428]: The only items, apart from Development Aid and the United Kingdom's refunds (which will not feature in future budgets) which the Commission is proposing to exclude from the allocated budget, are various representation expenses and the Contingency Reserve. If items of expenditure are transferred from the reserve to the budget lines, they will then fall within the allocated budget. The rest of the Commission's communication sets out its proposals for including in the allocated budget items that have hitherto been excluded. The Council of Ministers has accepted the Commission's proposals for the gradual extension of the allocated budget with the exception of one item that relates to fisheries agreements with third countries and was included in error.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made as to how the net payment to be made by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community for 1985 and the years immediately following on the basis of a value added tax contribution of 1·4 per cent. will compare with the actual net payment made by the United Kingdom in 1984 and the years immediately before on the basis of a 1 per cent. value added tax payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985 c. 428]: The Government's latest projection of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community (along with figures for earlier years) is contained in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428).

The White Paper figures assume that the 1 per cent. VAT ceiling will be raised to 1·4 per cent. on 1 January 1986. However, they allow for some supplementary financing of both the 1984 and 1985 Community budgets.

As a result of the agreement reached at Fontainebleau on VAT abatements, the United Kingdom's VAT rate after abatement is likely to remain below 1 per cent., while that in other member states will be in excess of 1 per cent., the United Kingdom's net payments to the Community in future years are likely to be about half of what they would have been had there been no agreement, no refunds or abatements, and had the 1 per cent. VAT ceiling remained in force.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the agreement made at the Fontainebleau Council of Ministers placed any restriction on the timing of the approval by the Parliaments of member states of the increase in own resources as a precondition to the payment of the £600 millions rebate for 1984; and if the position has altered in any respect following the decisions of subsequent meetings of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985, c. 428]: The payment in 1985 of the United Kingdom's VAT abatement of 1,000 mecu would be incompatible with the present own-resources decision, and so provision had to be made for it in the new one which is required to implement the Fontainebleau mechanism for the United Kingdom's abatements in future years and the increase in the VAT ceiling to 1.4 per cent. Neither the United Kingdom's 1984 abatement nor the increase in the ceiling can, therefore, be implemented until national Parliaments of all member states approve the new own-resources decision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wheat and Barley (Intervention Stocks)

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase storage capacity for wheat and barley taken in intervention after the next harvest.

Mr. MacGregor: The Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce normally reserves storage space as the need for it is established. The board is currently inviting tenders for storage space additional to that already under contract for intervention grain for the early part of the 1985-86 season.

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of tonnes of wheat and barley, in addition to what is already in store, which can be taken into store by the Intervention Board in stores it already has.

Mr. MacGregor: There is space at present for a further 58,000 tonnes of barley and 203,000 tonnes of wheat in intervention stores in Great Britain.

Horticulture (Wage Levels)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the implications of the level of wage increases proposed by the horticultural section of the Agricultural Wages Council on the viability of small horticultural operators.

Mrs. Fenner: I received six letters from the horticultural sector, objecting to the increase in minimum wages set by the Agricultural Wages Board to take effect from 2 June 1985.

EC (Food Surpluses)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what decisions have been made by the Management Committee of the common agricultural policy dealing with the disposal of food surpluses on the sale of food and wine on terms more advantageous than the normal rebated prices; if he will detail, in respect of the past 12 months, the contracts approved, the quantities and prices involved, and the countries receiving the special supplies; and if the representative of Her Majesty's Government on the Committee approved or voted against each particular contract.

Mr. Jopling: The proposals on which decisions were made in the Management Committee for milk and milk products, involving special sale terms for the export of butter, the only commodity for which such measures have been taken in the last 12 months, are as follows. In all cases which involved discriminatory special sales the United Kingdom representative on the committee voted against the adoption of the measures. However it is not the business of the Management Committee to approve individual contracts. Since some contracts involved butter sold under a combination of these regulations, it is impossible to be specific about prices. To date, the Commission estimates that 350,000 tonnes of butter have been sold under these regulations taken together.

26 July 1984—Adoption of regulation (EEC) 2268/84, which provides for the sale of butter aged at least six months old from intervention stock for export with a subsidy of 9·26p per lb in addition to the export refund.

26 July 1984—Adoption of regulation (EEC) 2278/84, which provides for the sale of butter taken into intervention store before 1 April 1983 for export as ghee with a subsidy of 11.23p per lb in addition to the export refund for butteroil.

As adopted, regulation 2268/84 applied only in respect of the USSR and certain Middle East countries. Regulation 2278/84 applied only in respect of certain Middle East countries.

16 October 1984—Adoption of amendments to regulation 2268/84 to increase the subsidy to 9·68p per lb and to provide for the export of butter sold under this regulation in the form of butteroil.

16 October 1984—Adoption of regulation (EEC) 2956/84, title II of which provided for the sale of butter, stored in intervention stocks since before 1 April 1983 for export either as butter or in the form of butteroil to the destinations specified in regulation 2268/84, with a subsidy of 39·72p per lb in addition to the relevant export refund. Access to butter under this regulation was limited to traders who had purchased at least 50,000 tonnes of butter under Regulation 2268/84 and who concluded contracts to export all the butter purchased under 2956/84 to one destination.

29 November 1984—Adoption of a Commission proposal amending regulations 2268/84 and 2278/84 to apply them in respect of exports to all destinations and repealing title II of regulation 2956/84.

14 February 1985—Adoption of a Commission proposal amending regulation 2268/84 to provide for a subsidy of 7·72p per lb in addition to the export refund in butter exported from stocks under EEC-aided private storage contracts.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the approval of Her Majesty's Government or their representative in the management Committee of the Common Market will be required before the Common Market Commission concludes its deal through the Interaga company of Paris to sell 380,000 tonnes of butter to the Soviet Union at 16p per pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The Community currently has 895,996 tonnes of butter in its intervention stocks. Any proposals for the sale of this butter on special terms would have to be put to representatives of member States in the Management Committee, where a vote would be taken. There are no such proposals before the Management Committee at the present time.

Agriculture Council

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting held in Brussels on 22 to 23 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: With my hon. Friend the Minister of State in my Department, I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Agriculture Council on 22 and 23 April 1985.

The Italian presidency presented a paper on 1985-86 CAP prices which they hoped might facilitate progress. However, it became clear during the meeting that it did not form the basis for a settlement.

Discussion will resume at the next meeting of the Council beginning on 2 May. Further compromise proposals from the presidency and/or the Commission are expected to be put forward. The President has stated that this meeting will continue for so long as is necessary to reach a conclusion.

The Council agreed to extend the 1984-85 marketing years for beef and veal, sheepmeat, milk products, dried fodder and cauliflowers to 5 May.

Animals (Slaughter)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken to ensure that animals in pain are slaughtered without delay.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 22 April 1985, c. 381]: It is illegal under the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 to permit livestock on agricultural land to suffer unnecessary pain; and there are powers under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 for a police constable to order the destruction of an animal which it is cruel to keep alive.

It is a requirement of the Slaughter of Animals (Prevention of Cruelty) Regulations 1958 that any animal which is in pain on arrival or subsequently at a slaughterhouse, knacker's yard or lairage attached to a slaughterhouse should be slaughtered without delay.

Grass Carp

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations are in force to control the introduction and use of grass carp; whether grass carp (Ctenopharyngodon idellus), have been subject to his scientific department's attention before being released into British waters; if he will list the waters in which they have been introduced; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Macgregor [pursuant to his reply, 23 April, c. 387]: For some 16 years, from 1964, my directorate of fisheries research were involved in research into the potential use of grass carp (Ctenopharyngodon idellus) for weed control purposes. This work is now completed.

Under section 30 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975, it is an offence to introduce any fish or spawn of fish into an inland water in England and Wales unless consent has been obtained first from the water authority within whose area the water is situated; this applies to grass carp as much as to any other species.

Under section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, the release into the wild of grass carp—it is not ordinarily resident in and is not a regular visitor to Great Britain in a wild state—is prohibited except under licence. I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are responsible for the issue of such licences for grass carp. Before we issue a licence we are required to consult the Nature Conservancy Council which acts as our statutory adviser; to date, the only purpose for which such licences have been issued is weed control, and in every case the issue has been in accordance with the criteria specified by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Licences for the release of grass carp into the wild have been issued under the 1981 Act as follows:

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the percentage increase or decrease in the intervention stocks of the European Economic Community, both in public and private stores, over the past 12 months in the particular cases of cereals, butter, powdered milk, beef and sugar, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 23 April, 1985, c. 387.]: The figures requested are as follows:

Percentage Change in EC Stocks
(March 1984 to March 1985 (per cent.))

	Public Intervention	Private Storage
Cereals	+121	‡
Butter	−6·8	*
Skimmed Milk Powder	−45·7	‡
Beef†	+74·1	+704·2
Sugar	*	‡

Notes:
* 1984 figure was zero.
† Public intervention figures relate to percentage increase in stocks from February 1984 to February 1985; private storage figures relate to percentage increase in stocks from January 1984 to January 1985.
‡ No assisted private storage schemes exist for these products.

Export Rebates

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total sum expended by the European Economic Community in providing export rebates to subsidise the export of cereals, butter, powdered milk, beef and sugar, respectively, in the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available; and by what percentage these totals exceed or were less than the comparable individual totals in the previous 12 months.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 23 April, 1985 c. 388.]: The following table sets out the information requested:

	Mecu 1983	1984	per cent. change
Cereals	1525·0	918·3	−39·8
Butter	498·8	589·7	+18·2

EMPLOYMENT

Benefit System (Personal Data)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the personal data held on the computerised national unemployment benefit system for each person receiving benefit.

Mr. Alan Clark: The computerised national unemployment benefit system holds both personal details about claimants and the details of their claim to benefit. The latter are often complicated and technical and to some extent therefore the following list is a summary.

The information held is:
(1) Name.
(2) National insurance number.
(3) Date of birth.
(4) Address.
(5) Sex.
(6) Marital status.
(7) Whether the person is a student.
(8) Whether the person has worked since leaving full time education.
(9) The post office at which the person will cash benefit girobank cheques.
(10) Whether girobank cheques are to be posted to the person or handed to him/her at the unemployment benefit office.
(11) The weekday on which the claimant must attend to make his/her weekly or fortnightly claim for benefit.
(12) A code letter to indicate where claim documents are filed.
(13) The beginning and end dates of the current period of claim and the cumulative total of days paid.
(14) The date and amount of the last payment made to the person.
(15) The dates and rates at which benefit has been paid on the current claim.
(16) Dates for which an increase of benefit for a dependant has been admitted.
(17) Dates and amounts of supplementary allowance overall need.
(18) The dates of any period for which benefit has been suspended, disallowed or disqualified and the reason for it.
(19) The code number of the last office at which unemployment or incapacity benefit was claimed.
(20) The code number of the current office of claim.
(21) Whether the next payment of benefit is to be made to another person appointed by the claimant to receive it. The name and address of that person.
(22) Details of national insurance contributions paid by or credited to the claimant which may be relevant to the current claim.
(23) Information on whether the contribution conditions for receipt of benefit are satisfied.
(24) Whether the person has exhausted entitlement to unemployment benefit or has requalified for benefit following exhaustion.
(25) Dates of any known periods of full-time education or training which may be relevant to the claim.
(26) Information on the satisfaction of the additional condition for receipt of benefit for full time students.
(27) Information relating to the award of special credits to widows and women whose marriages have terminated.
(28) Information relating to the award of special credits to people who have recently begun paying national insurance contributions.
(29) Dates of marriage and termination of marriage.
(30) Dates of a married woman's election to pay or not pay reduced rate national insurance contributions.
(31) Weeks for which credits of national insurance contributions are available in the current period of claim.
(32) Details of earnings declared by the person and deducted from supplementary allowance otherwise due.
(33) Details of previous spells of unemployment, incapacity or approved training which could affect the current claim.
(34) The date or dates and reasons that the claim is to be reviewed.

(35) A detailed record of days for which benefit was claimed in the current spell.
(36) Dates of any delayed claim for benefit admitted in the current spell.
(37) Details of previous pay and tax, tax references and tax code.
(38) Details of total benefit and total taxable benefit paid in the current spell.
(39) The amount of occupational pension affecting the claim.
(40) The type and amount of any other benefit received by the person or a dependant which may reduce or extinguish entitlement to unemployment benefit.
(41) The amount and type of any previously overpaid benefit which is to be recovered by deduction from current benefit.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Employment how staff of his Department access personal data held on the computerised national unemployment benefit system; and whether personal data can be accessed without the national insurance number being given.

Mr. Alan Clark: Personal data can be accessed only by staff of this Department and the Department of Health and Social Security using the national insurance number and is output to unemployment benefit offices in printed form.

Computerisation

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the results of the experiment conducted whereby on-line computer access to the Department of Health and Social Security general index was available to his Department's staff; and if he will describe what national insurance number tracing facilities will be available to his Department's staff when the planned terminal replacement and inquiry system is operational.

Mr. Alan Clark: The experiment showed that on-line tracing of national insurance numbers in unemployment benefit offices is a practicable and effective alternative to the present clerical tracing arrangements which exist between UBOs and DHSS Newcastle records.

On-line tracing facilities for national insurance numbers will not be available to unemployment benefit offices when the terminal replacement and inquiry service is first installed, but will be made available once the DHSS operational strategy departmenal central index is operational, which is currently planned for late 1987.

In the meantime, my Department is considering with DHSS a limited extension at regional level of the pilot tracing system to the existing DHSS general index.

Wages Councils

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the statistical evidence upon which the statement in the answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 416, third paragraph, regarding the effect of the possible abolition of wages councils on the circumstances of some employees was based.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The statement in question is a value judgment not susceptible to statistical analysis.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many information technology centres are sponsored entirely or in part by local authorities.

Mr. Peter Morrison: One hundred and twenty-nine information technology centres are sponsored entirely or in part by local authorities.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether non-qualifiers for youth training scheme schemes lose their supplementary benefit if scheme managers cannot accommodate them.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. Young people are liable to have their benefit reduced only if they unreasonably refuse or leave a place on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether the Manpower Services Commission increases available places on schemes for non-qualifiers and non-examinees;

(2) whether additional support will be made available by Manpower Services Commission inspectors and their auditors for youth training schemes with a large intake of non-examinees or non-qualifiers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I am satisfied that there are sufficient places on the youth training scheme to cater for the whole ability range, including those with no academic qualifications, and that the various methods of funding available offer the flexibility needed to accommodate those trainees who require extra help.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment what provision the Manpower Services Commission is taking to enable young people with disabilities to be encouraged to join youth training schemes in cases where they are non-examinees.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The youth training scheme is open equally to all eligible young people, including those with disabilities and those without formal educational qualifications. Disabled youngsters are, of course, eligible to enter the scheme up to the age of 21. The Manpower Services Commission has introduced various measures to enable those who need special help to gain maximum benefit from the scheme, and has produced publicity material to encourage them to participate.

Energy Action Projects

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the additional places which have been made available under the community programme will be specifically earmarked for local energy action projects.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We asked the Manpower Services Commission in the autumn to ensure that, wherever possible, a high priority is given to proposals for funding energy conservation projects under the community programme. The expansion of the programme by 100,000 places to 230,000 places provides the opportunity for a further significant increase in the number of these projects.

Hairdressing

Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) in the case of each of the hairdressing businesses set up under the enterprise allowance scheme which have subsequently failed, how many were set up by qualified hairdressers and how many by unqualified hairdressers;

(2) how many hairdressing businesses have so far been set up under the enterprise allowance scheme; and how many of these businesses have subsequently failed.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) on 28 March 1985 at column 145.

School Leavers

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people left school in September 1984 in Portsmouth; how many got jobs; how many went to youth training schemes; and how many are unemployed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Available information from the Hampshire careers service for the Portsmouth area shows that, at 12 November 1984, of 910 fifth-year leavers in 1984, 310 had been placed in or found employment, 503 were taking part in the youth training scheme and 88 were unemployed.

Young People (Pay)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the average rates of pay for 16, 17 and 18-year-olds including those on Government training schemes, for the years 1979 and 1985, expressed at (a) 1979 prices, and (b) 1983 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of the earnings of 16, 17 and 18-year-olds are available from the "New Earnings Survey". This gives information for employees only and thus will only include those on Government training schemes who have employee status.

The table shows earnings for April 1979 and April 1984 (the latest date for which survey results are available) deflated using the retail price index.

Average weekly earnings of full-time employees whose pay was not affected by absence
Great Britain April

17	40·8	63·3	39·0	60·6
18	49·8	77·3	48·3	74·9

Benefit System (Equipment)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will describe the present computer equipment and communication links of the national unemployment benefit system; and if he will describe the changes planned under the terminal replacement and inquiry system.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

Under the current national unemployment benefit system, unemployment benefit offices transmit and receive information via teletype terminals linked by telegraph-speed lines to ICL 2966 mainframe computers at the Reading and Livingston computer centres. These terminals are to be replaced, over a two-year period, by Honeywell visual display units, which will be linked by British Telecom packet switchstream service to ICL dual 2966 machines at the two computer centres.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the terrorist organisations publicly claiming responsibility for murders in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 and the numbers of murders thus attributable to each such organisation.

Mr. Scott: As far as it is known the information is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Provisional Irish Republican Army	26	30	34	32	30
Irish National Liberation Army	4	5	5	3	3
Irish Freedom Fighters	—	—	—	—	1
Ulster Freedom Fighters	—	2	—	1	2
Protestant Action Force	1	—	1	—	1

Disabled People (Assistance)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each area board who received assistance with the provision of aids in 1983-84;

(2) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each area board who received assistance with adaptations to the home in 1983-84;

(3) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each area board who received assistance with the installation of telephones in 1983-84;

(4) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each area board who received assistance with the payment of telephone rentals in 1983-84.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information for the year ended 31 December 1983 is as follows. Figures for 1984 are not yet available.

Type of assistance Health and Social Services Board	Number of cases	Rate per 1,000 population*

* The population figures used in the calculation of rate per 1,000 in the table were taken from the general register office's estimated population for each area at mid-year 1983.

† The information relates only to personal aids supplied through the social services departments of health and social services boards. Information about aids provided by boards through the hospital and community nursing services is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

‡ In addition to those adaptations, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive carried out 6,059 adaptations to its own dwellings to meet the needs of disabled people and made 281 improvement and intermediate grants for private sector dwellings for a similar pupose.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each area board who received assistance with holidays in 1983-84.

Mr. Chris Patten: Assistance with holidays is provided in Northern Ireland by both the health and social services boards and the education and library boards. The information for 1983-84 is as follows:

	Number	Rate per 1,000 population
Health and social services board
Eastern	1,546	2·38
Northern	281	0·74
Southern	203	0·72
Western	342	1·32

Northern Ireland	11,538	7·3

In addition, the Department of Education (Northern Ireland) assisted 887 persons mainly through a holiday scheme run by Children's Community Holidays, a voluntary organisation which provides holidays for mixed religion groupings. A further 3,704 children were assisted under the Department's children's community relations holiday scheme. As those children are selected from across the Province, it is not possible to provide the information on an area board basis, but the majority are located in the greater Belfast area with Londonderry having the second highest number.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Privatisation Schemes

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the estimated savings by his Department for 1984-85 as a result of privatisation schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our information shows that tendering exercises completed so far have achieved savings of at least £9·4 million a year. All savings are retained by health authorities for expenditure on their patient services and are not returned to our Department.

NHS (Ancillary Workers)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many (a) female and (b) male ancillary workers were made redundant in the National Health Service in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively;

(2) how many jobs held by women workers have been lost in the National Health Service since May 1979.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect the information requested centrally. However, between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1985, 578 female and 267 male ancillary workers aged 50 or over with at least five years service qualified for early payment of retirement benefits on leaving the National Health Service because of premature retirement or redundancy.

Fazakerley Resettlement Unit

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what evidence he bases his conclusion that the closure of the Fazakerley resettlement unit will not mean that homeless men have to sleep rough.

Mr. Whitney: Before the closure of Fazakerley resettlement unit, the needs of the users will be assessed and the process of regional consultation will result in recommendations for funding the type of accommodation and services that meet those needs to ensure that no-one need be made homeless as a result of this closure.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent on refurbishment at Fazakerley re-establishment and resettlement units since November 1981.

Mr. Whitney: Over £67,000 was spent on refurbishment at the Fazakerley resettlement unit and re-establishment centre in the financial years 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84. Equivalent figures are not available in respect of the exact period required.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many men were referred to Fazakerley re-establishment centre in 1984 by each of his Department's offices (a) in the north-west, (b) on Merseyside and (c) in total.

Mr. Whitney: The number of men referred to the Fazakerley re-establishment centre in 1984 by the Department's offices on Merseyside is shown in the table. There were no referrals by any of the Department's offices outside Merseyside.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if it remains the view of his Department that the Fazakerley re-establishment and resettlement unit has buildings, pavings and roads that are in good condition and can be used until at least 1995.

Mr. Whitney: Yes. A survey conducted by the Property Services Agency in 1981 indicated that the buildings, roads and pavings at Fazakerley resettlement unit and re-establishment centre were in good condition and could be used until at least 1995 providing that maintenance continued at the then level. Maintenance has been continued at that level, thereby sustaining the position.

Drinking Water (Nitrate)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what evidence he has of a correlation connection between nitrate levels in drinking water and stomach cancer;

(2) what evidence is available to him of the risks to health of excessive levels of nitrate in drinking water.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Recent epidemiological studies carried out in the United Kingdom based on both nitrate concentrations in water and occupational exposure to fertilisers containing nitrate have not shown an association between exposure to nitrate and stomach cancer. Also, none of the studies provides convincing evidence that nitrate ingestion contributes to cancers of other sites.

Nitrate concentrations much in excess of 100 milligrams per litre can lead to the risk of infantile methaemoglobinaemia—and exceedingly rare condition in the United Kingdom. Where concentrations exceed 100 milligrams in the water supply at any one time, low-nitrate water is provided for infant feeding.

Children in Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of children who have been in social services care in the west midlands region in each year since 1979 and the number of staff who have been employed to look after them during the same period.

Mr. John Patten: Complete information is not available in the form specified. Information on the numbers of children in the care of each of the local authorities in the west midlands region at 31 March 1983 and 1984 (where available) is given in the table. Information relating to 30 September 1983 on the numbers of staff employed by their social services departments to look after children in care who are accommodated in maintained/controlled community homes is also given. Information for previous years is given in the Department's annual publications entitled respectively "Children in Care of Local Authorities—England" and "Staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments —England", copies of which are in the Library.

Other categories of staff, for example, social workers, are also involved with children and young persons in care, but it is not possible to determine how much of their time is devoted to such children. These other categories of staff are enumerated in my other reply to the hon. Member today.

Social Services Staff (West Midlands)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what infomation he has as to the number of social services staff who have been employed in the west midlands region in each single year since 1979 in the following sectors: old people's homes, home help work, social work, children's homes, administration, day nurseries and day centres and mental illness and handicap homes.

Mr. John Patten: Information relating to 30 September 1983 on the numbers of staff employed by each of the social services departments in the west midlands region in the selected categories is given in the table. Information for previous years is given in the Department's annual publication entitled "Staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments — England", copies of which are in the Library.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths there have been from cancer of the cervix in the northern region in the past two years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The numbers of deaths from malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD (9th rev) 180) in the northern region in 1983 and 1984 were 155 and 134, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to eradicate inequalities in provision between different health authorities for smear testing and treatment for cervical cancer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are distributing extra resources to the National Health Service in a way which is steadily achieving a fairer distribution between different regions of the country. The aim of our policy for allocating resources between authorities is to promote more equal access to health care for those with equal needs. Within the framework of national policy the level of provision of specific services to be provided out of these resources is mainly for district health authorities to decide, taking account of local needs and priorities.

Flu Vaccine

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the loss of revenue caused by the fact that medical practitioners do not have to reimburse his Department with the difference between prices paid for flu vaccine and the discounted prices charged by the manufacturers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since 1 July 1984 reimbursement prices paid to general medical practitioners have taken account of discount received. My reply on 14 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Hickmet), at columns 243-44, explained why there has never been any loss of revenue, even before the introduction of the discount scale.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of prescriptions for flu vaccine which were dispensed in each year from 1981 to 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total number of prescriptions for flu vaccines dispensed in England from 1981 to 1983 were as follows:

	Number
1981	273,000
1982	249,100
1983	219,600

1983 is the last year for which data are available.

Prescriptions

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the loss of revenue occasioned by the fact that prescriptions dispensed by medical practitioners do not require the collection of charges in the same manner as those dispensed by chemist contractors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no evidence to suggest any loss of revenue. Like pharmacists, dispensing doctors are required to collect charges on the NHS items they dispense although they do not employ the same mechanism as pharmacists. However, we are keeping this matter under review.

National Insurance Contributions

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many workers and how many employees have been prosecuted (a) nationally and (b) in the west midlands for non-payment of national insurance contributions for each of the last three years.

Mr. Whitney: The Department prosecutes employees for non-payment of national insurance contributions extremely rarely. The table shows the number of actions against employers who have not paid national insurance contributions for their employees. Separate figures are not readily available for criminal prosecutions taken in the west midlands area and the table refers to the midlands as a whole; similarly, separate regional figures are not readily available for civil actions mounted to recover unpaid national insurance contributions.

	Criminal prosecutions for non-payment of Class 1 national insurance contributions		Civil actions to recover unpaid Class 1 contributions
	Midlands	National	National
1982	233	808	1,137
1983	339	1,625	1,038
1984	524	2,278	976

Disabled People (Assistance)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each local authority who received assistance with the provision of aids in 1983-84;

(2) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each local authority who received assistance with holidays in 1983-84;

(3) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each local authority who received assistance with the installation of telephones in 1983-84;

(4) if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each local authority who received assistance with the payment of telephone rentals in 1983-84.

Mr. Newton: In view of the volume of information, I am sending it to the right hon. Member. I will also place copies in the Library.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of cases and the rate per 1,000 population in each local authority who received assistance with adaptations to the home in 1983-84.

Mr. Newton: The Department did not collect information for 1983-84 on the total number of cases assisted with adaptations, for the reasons given in my reply to the right hon. Member on 3 April 1984, at column 480, to his request for similar information relating to 1982-83. The collection of these returns has, however, been resumed for the current year.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what use is made of the statistics gathered annually by his Department from individual local authorities concerning the number of cases of assistance given with regard to the provision of aids, adaptations, holidays and the installation and rental of telephones; and during which month each year they become available from his Department.

Mr. Newton: These data provide one of the inputs to the Department's development of policy on services for disabled people, and to its monitoring of trends in provision. The information, which is published annually, is also drawn on by local authorities themselves, voluntary and private organisations and others with an interest in this field, including, of course, right hon. and hon. Members. Provisional figures are usually available from the Department about seven or eight months after the end of the year to which they refer, and final figures after about 10 months.

Prestwich Hospital (Long-stay Patients)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new long-stay mental illness patients have been admitted to Prestwich hospital by the Salford district health authority; if the judgment exercised regarding admitting such patients is being taken on medical or administrative gounds; what is the policy of his Department regarding the admission of such patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The admission of long-stay mental illness patients to Prestwich hospital is the responsibility of the Salford district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to make inquiries of the chairman of the authority.

In general, our policy favours the provision of comprehensive services for mental illness patients on a district basis using facilities conveniently situated for the community served.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will reconsider the decision to exclude Asilone from the limited list of drugs available on National Health Service prescription; and whether he will give reasons for his decision on this matter.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Chief Medical Officer's group of medical and pharmaceutical experts, set up to advise on the contents of the selected list, considered that there was no clinical need for antacid containing dimethicone, such as Asilone, and that they should be included in the schedule of products not available under the National Health Service. We accepted this group's advice in full.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the drugs which are available under the limited list and suitable for prescription for children to act as decongestants for mild sinusitis or eustachian catarrh; and whether he will review this position.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am advised that doctors might prescribe Sudafed Elixir, Ephedrine Nasal Drops BPC 0·5 per cent. or Xylometazoline Hydrochloride Nasal Drops

BP 0·05 per cent., all of which are available under the National Health Service, for children with such conditions.

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in order to prevent the dispensing of Lobak for prescriptions written as chlormezanone/paracetamol, he intends to add chlormezanone to list B of the prescribing regulations.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether general practitioners may prescribe any medication on the list of prohibited preparations provided the medication is set out in terms of its generic contents which do not appear on the list of prohibited preparations.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to seek consultations with representatives of the British Medical Association and the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry to discuss the procedure adopted by some general practitioners of prescribing brand named drugs on the banned list under their generic names; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 355]: A very small number of doctors are trying to evade the NHS selected list. I am afraid that they are being encouraged by certain pharmaceutical companies to use various devices in attempts to get scheduled drugs dispensed at NHS expense. One company has even gone so far as to make available rubber stamps listing the generic ingredients of a scheduled proprietary painkiller. I am glad to say that the use of such prescriptions by formula is, however, insufficient to achieve the intended result.

Regulations allow a pharmacist to substitute a scheduled drug only for one ordered by a non-proprietary name, which means a name listed in the British Pharmacopoeia or other reference work or formulary of similar standing. A list of ingredients is not a non-proprietary name, and no substitution may be made.

We will not penalise pharmacists who have dispensed invalid prescriptions in good faith and in accordance with accepted professional standards. We will, of course, take action against any doctor or pharmacist who continues to participate in these attempts to evade the regulations for the benefit of pharmaceutical companies at public expense.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many Easter school leavers he expects to be affected by the recent decision concerning eligibility to supplementary benefit; and what annual sum will be involved;

(2) what steps he proposes to take to apprise Easter school leavers who will return to school to sit public examinations of their possible eligibility to supplementary benefit; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he expects to issue new guidance concerning eligibility for supplementary benefit of Easter school leavers who return to school to take examinations, following the recent decision of the Social Security Commissioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We estimate that about 8,000 to 9,000 young people may be affected by the recent decision of the Social Security Commissioners on the eligibility of school leavers for supplementary benefit, but the amount of benefit payable will vary according to individual circumstances and this makes it difficult to provide a meaningful estimate of the actual benefit expenditure involved. The implications of the decision have been brought to the attention of the local education authorities' careers services, who will be able to advise school leavers appropriately. The Chief Adjudication Officer is issuing new guidance to adjudication officers in local offices.

Bradford Area Health Authority

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the change in real terms for the Bradford district health authority between 1978 and 1983 in the (a) number of inpatient cases treated by hospitals, (b) number of day cases treated by hospitals, (c) number of outpatient attendances dealt with by hospitals, (d) spending on health services and (e) number of doctors and nurses.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 1 April 1985, c. 497]: I am now able to respond to my hon. Friend as follows:

(a), (b) and (c) Hospital inpatient, day cases and outpatient attendances
Bradford district health authority (Bradford health district prior to 1. 4. 1982)

	1978	1983	Change Number	Percentage
Inpatient cases	49,550	55,775	+6,225	+12·6
Day cases	6,832	9,219	+2,387	+34·9
Total outpatient attendances	272,271	309,613	+37,342	+13·7

(d) Spending on Health Services

It is not possible to determine the amount of change in real terms because of the change in the composition of health authorities that occurred in 1982. The actual figures for revenue net of income for Bradford were:

1978-79 £	1983-84 £	Change Percentage
27,635,939	51,778,600	+87

(e) Number of Doctors and Nurses

Medical Practitioners

Figures for Senior Registrars and Consultants are not included as figures held centrally as not split by district.

Medical Staff

1978	1983	Change Number	Change Percentage
272	292	+20	+7·3

Nursing and Midwifery Staff

The earliest available figures that relate to district health authorities are for 30 September 1979. It is therefore not possible to provide the figures required. However, comparison of 1979 and 1983 is as follows:

Nursing Staff (Whole Time Equivalents)

1979	1983	Change Number	Change Percentage
2,675	2,940	+265	+9·9

Any comparison of cost or manpower against throughout of patients is an extremely crude measure because it does not take into account varying factors such as age of patients and type and complexity of treatment given.

ENERGY

Domestic Fuel Costs

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what were the average fuel costs of domestic consumers in the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Figures for 1984, the latest year for which information is available, are as follows:

Average price of gas (including standing charge) to domestic credit meter consumers in Great Britain using 400 therms per annum—*44·7 pence per therm.

Average price of electricity (including standing charge) to consumers in England and Wales on the standard domestic tariff using 3,300 kwhs per annum—*6·027 pence per kwh.

Average price of housecoal (Group 2)—†£5·44 per 50 kg.

Average price of standard grade burning oil—‡19·67 pence per litre.

Sources: BCG, Electricity Council, NCB, Department of Energy.

* December 1984 price. Average prices for the year will depend on the pattern of consumption and the timing of tariff increases.

† Average of the December 1983 and December 1984 prices for a 50 kg bag in the London area.

‡ Average of prices prevailing in the 12 months of 1984.

Solar Energy

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the level of capital investment in energy projects involving solar energy in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department's spending on research and development on solar energy over the past five years has been as follows:

	£ million
1980-1981	0·9
1981-1982	0·7
1982-1983	1·4
1983-1984	0·9
1984-1985	0·5

My Department does not keep information on capital expenditure on the applications of solar energy by private and other agencies.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future development of nuclear power.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government continue to attach importance to the safe and economic development of nuclear power.

Standing Charges

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will ask the chairman of the Electricity Council for a report on the operation of the low usage standing charge abatement scheme.

Mr. Goodlad: I have discussed the scheme with the chairman of the council, who has informed me that the industry has decided to end the scheme. The council is considering whether any useful alternative scheme can be devised to assist deserving consumers.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Courses (Industrial Placements)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received since 1979 from employers in private industry expressing their wish for a greater say in the content of postgraduate or undergraduate courses involving students whom they sponsor and to whom they intend to offer an industrial placement.

Mr. Brooke: The Department has no record of receiving such representations. The content of courses is primarily a matter for the institutions offering them and employers could normally be expected to discuss these matters with institutions direct.

Further Education

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of young people aged 16 to 19 years in the London borough of Waltham Forest are in full-time education.

Sir Keith Joseph: In January 1984, the latest date for which information is available the proportion of young people aged 16 and over but under 19 years (that is 16 to 18s) in Waltham Forest receiving full-time education in schools or further education establishments was 32 per cent. Information about those students of the borough in this age group who are attending universities is not readily available.

Mr. P. G. Farley

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth on 17th April, Official Report, column 175, how the reply was transmitted to the hon. Member; and if, in view of the fact than no such reply has yet been received by the hon. Member, he will ensure that another copy is dispatched forthwith.

Sir Keith Joseph: The reply to my hon. Friend was sent by hand to the House on 17 April. Since it seems that the reply was not received by my hon. Friend, I am sending him a further copy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Royal Assent

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal how many Government Bills received Royal Assent in each of the last 10 parliamentary Sessions.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested is as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Medical Service

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now consider abolishing the prison medical service in women's prisons and replacing it with the normal National Health Service provisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Immigration Statistics

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of citizens originating from former British Commonwealth member nations who have either been deported or refused entry clearance into the United Kingdom in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Waddington: Information on the number of persons deported is given in the table. The available information on refusals of entry clearance relates only to Pakistan where in the years 1979 to 1984, respectively, a total of 4,755, 3,293, 3,011, 2,901, 2,320 and 1,863 persons were refused clearance for entry to the United Kingdom either for immediate settlement or for admission for a limited period as husbands, fiancés, students, visitors, and so on.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the numbers of passengers arriving in the United Kingdom from the Indian sub-continent during 1984 who were (a) given leave to enter and (b) refused leave to enter, in each of the following categories: ordinary visitors, business visitors, in transit, returning after temporary absence abroad, students, work permit holders and dependants, coming for settlement on arrival, and others.

Mr. Waddington: The available information, which is given in the following table, will be published in the forthcoming Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1984". Information on those refused leave to enter does not identify the category in which they sought entry.

Citizens of Indian sub-continent countries given leave to enter and refused, 1984

	Number of journeys
Given leave to enter:
Ordinary visitors	190,000
Business visitors	41,100
In transit	36,600
Returning after temporary absence abroad	76,600
Students	3,790
Work permit holders	700
Dependants of work permit holders	260
Settlement on arrival	9,100
Others	6,960
Total	365,000
Refused leave to enter	3,891

Durham H Wing

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what offences were committed by the inmates of Durham H wing; what are the corresponding sentences; and if he is satisfied that all such offences warrant maximum security confinement.

Mr. Mellor: The table shows the offences and corresponding sentences for the 35 inmates who were in Durham H wing on 18 April. Allocation to the wing takes account of the nature of the offence, the length of sentence and behaviour in custody, as well as the availability of accommodation for female prisoners. We are satisfied that in the case of those who are presently in H wing these factors have been fully taken into account. Most will be able to move on to less secure conditions in due course.

Civil Defence

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Tyne and Wear county council is now fulfilling all its obligations for the provision of civil defence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: More work is needed to meet the requirements of the 1983 regulations; progress will be monitored.

Queen's Building, Heathrow

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the cells at the Queen's Building, Heathrow, used to detain immigrants, meet minimum standards for police detention; whether there is natural light and proper air circulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The rooms in Queen's Building used to detain immigrants are not cellular accommodation and therefore the minimum standards for police cells are an inappropriate basis for comparison. The accommodation includes a lounge with television, washing facilities, toilets and two pay-phones to which those held there have free access. Five bedrooms, each with three beds are available for use by male detainees. Females are not held overnight. The building is ventilated and heated by an air conditioning duct to a reasonable standard. It is well lit although the natural light needs to be supplemented with artificial lighting.

The existing facilities, and their use, are currently under review.

Prisons (Mail Bags)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in England and Wales where work on mail bags still takes place.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 35 prisons are engaged on mail bag production in England and Wales. They are as follows:

Bedford
Birmingham
Camp Hill
Canterbury
Castington
Dartmoor
Dorchester
Durham
Everthorpe
Exeter
Gartree
Gloucester
Haverigg
Lancaster
Leeds
Leicester
Lincoln
Liverpool
Manchester
Northallerton

Armed Forces (Police Officers)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if serving members of the armed forces who wish to become police officers are first obliged to discharge themselves before any application is considered.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Chief officers of police are normally prepared to consider applications from members of the armed forces during their last year of service.

Peacock Committee

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to announce the composition of Professor Peacock's committee on the financing of the British Broadcasting Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be able to do so before long.

Police Accountability for Community Enlightenment

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether the investigation by the Metropolitan police into the financial affairs of the Police Accountability for Community Enlightenment organisation in the London borough of Islington has been concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the investigation by the Metropolitan police has not yet been concluded.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list which police forces have agreed to co-operate in Exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Not yet; the extent of police participation in Exercise Brave Defender is still being considered by chief constables in consultation with the armed services.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the variety of fresh fruit offered to prisoners at Holloway prison on a daily and weekly basis; and how its availability compares with that available two years ago.

Mr. Mellor: A cash extras allowance is allocated in respect of each prison inmate, and some proportion of the allowance must be spent each week on fresh fruit for all inmates. The type and amount of fruit to be purchased are left to local discretion and inmates' preferences are taken into account when this is practicable. This arrangement is common to all penal establishments and has not changed in the last two years.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisoners at Holloway prison kept in their cells for (a) more than 10 hours a day and (b) 20 hours or more a day; and for what reasons they are so kept.

Mr. Mellor: These numbers change from day to day according to the availability of staff, but most prisoners at Holloway spend more than 10 hours a day in their cells. We believe that the prisoners at Holloway should be enabled to spend more time out of their cells and to have access to a variety of activities, and the committee which we announced on 12 December is specifically asked to consider how to achieve this.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how many hours a day workshops and gymnasium facilities at Holloway prison are under-used; and what are the reasons for under-use.

Mr. Mellor: In the four-week period ending 19 April staff shortages at Holloway led to the cancellation of 15 out of 48 scheduled two-hour gymnasium sessions. For the same reason, prison workshops were operational for 25 out of a possible maximum of 252 hours.

GLC Ethnic Minorities Unit (Arson)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on police inquiries into the arson attack on the ethnic minorities unit at the Greater London council on 26 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 24 April at columns 476-77.

Leicestershire

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed as a direct result of grant-aid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 within the county of Leicestershire.

Mr. Waddington: On 31 March 1985 Leicestershire county council had approval for grant to be paid on 296 full-time equivalent posts. Leicester city council had approval for 17 full-time equivalent posts.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children, social workers and environmental health officers were involved or employed within the county of Leicestershire under the various formulae determining expenditure on grant-aid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. Waddington: The formula arrangement referred to in reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 18 April at columns 234-35 related to additional staffing costs which could be attributed to the presence of commonwealth immigrants, but it was not paid in respect of identified posts. In recent years the only "formula" grant which has been paid in Leicestershire has been to the county council in respect of the employment of staff in day nurseries.

Leicestershire Education Authority

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown for each of the past five years showing the amount of education expenditure and the number of posts involved supported by grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for Leicestershire education authority; how often such supported posts are reviewed; and what steps he takes to satisfy himself of (a) the efficiency with which the funds allocated are disbursed and (b) the productivity of the staff employed in administering and disbursing the funds.

Mr. Waddington: The table shows, in respect of the last five-year period for which information is available, the expenditure on education staff by the Leicestershire county council on which the Home Office paid grant at 75 per cent. It shows also the number of full-time equivalent (FTE) posts to which that expenditure relates. Posts approved under criteria in force since 1 January 1983 will be reviewed after three years. All posts approved under the previous criteria are currently under review. Responsibility for considering applications for grant under section 11, and for making payments if grant is approved, rests with officials in the Department. Their efficiency is monitored by their line managers and their grading and work load are subject to regular staff inspections.

Leicestershire County Council—Education

	Posts FTE	Expenditure £
1979-80	241·2	1,566,186
1980-81	237·5	1,981,425
1981-82	238·75	2,160,926
1982-83	225·75	2,269,149
1983-84	235·00	2,481,975

Prisoners (Segregation)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners segregated under rule 43 at Leeds prison are currently sharing cells; and how many cells are involved;

(2) in what way are facilities for work, education, recreation and association more limited for segregated prisoners at Leeds prison than for other prisoners;

(3) if segregated prisoners have now been allocated a separate area at Birmingham prison;

(4) whether all young offenders segregated under rule 43 at Birmingham prison now have access to the prison's education facilities.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his replies, 25 March 1985, c. 15, and 26 March 1985, c. 132]: My noble Friend has written to the hon. Member today and I shall arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

European Community (Council of Ministers)

Q13. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the preparations being made for the next meeting of the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: Detailed preparations, for which the Italian Presidency is responsible, must depend on progress in the meantime in implementing the conclusions of the last European Council. Work on this is in hand.

North-east England

Q16. Mr. Fallon asked the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit north-east England.

The Prime Minister: I hope to do so later in the year.

Far East (Visit)

Q62. Mr. John Browne asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to the far east.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 16 April at columns 133-34.

Lord Hugh Thomas of Swynnerton

Q70. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister for what official purpose she has used the services of Lord Hugh Thomas of Swynnerton, since 1 March 1982.

The Prime Minister: None.

Soccer Hooliganism

Q95. Mr. Pendry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her discussions with the football authorities on 1 April regarding the problem of football hooliganism.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) on 4 April at columns 576-77.

USA (President)

Q100. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the President of the United States of America.

The Prime Minister: I will meet the President of the United States, and other Heads of Governments, when I attend the Bonn economic summit on 2 to 4 May 1985.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Skeet asked the Prime Minister whether the recycling of nuclear waste is to be included within the responsibilities of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The Prime Minister: No. My hon. Friend's responsibiities do not extend to nuclear materials.

Shipbuilding Industry

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Prime Minister what Her Majesty's Government's plans are for the future of the shipbuilding industry in Britain and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: First, to concentrate available resources on the most successful yards in order to create a cost-effective and efficient merchant shipbuilding industry and, secondly, to privatise the warship building yards by 31 March 1986.

Engagements

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if she will publish her official engagements for Thursday 25 April.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 25 April.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 April.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 25 April.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Republic of Ireland

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister if she will renew her general instruction to Government Departments and overseas missions that it is correct to describe the Republic of Ireland as such and that this term, and not Ireland, should normally be used; and whether she will now insist on compliance.

The Prime Minister: Government Departments and overseas missions are well aware that the forms "Republic of Ireland" or "Irish Republic" should now be used when describing that state. This is laid out in standing instructions to overseas posts, and similar advice was issued as recently as February 1985 to Government Departments.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Belfast, South of 15 April, Official Report, column 2, what are the reasons for Her Majesty's Government not giving information about meetings of officials under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to give details of the conduct of discussions between officials about current business, for which Ministers are responsible. I gave the House a complete list of meetings at ministerial level held under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council on 1 April at column 413.

EC (Trading Malpractices)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will advocate, at the next meeting of the European Community Council of Ministers, the right of national Governments to take protective action in cases where other Governments have not complied with European Community Commission instructions to end trading malpractices; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade stated on 25 March, the EEC treaty makes provision, in certain circumstances, for member states to take preventive measures if they encounter difficulties in intra-community trade.

Family Expenditure (Rent)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the proportion of average weekly income spent on rent in (a) Wales, (b) south-east England, (c) East Anglia, (d) Scotland, (e) England and (f) the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: Average weekly net housing costs for 1983 as reported in the Family Expenditure Survey for both the local authority and private rented sectors are shown in the table as a percentage of the average weekly gross household income in those areas. Because rent and rates are recorded as a single payment for most households in the local authority rented sector and some in the private sector, the housing costs shown comprise both rent and rates and small elements for maintenance, service and insurance costs.

	Average weekly net housing costs* £	Average weekly gross household income £	Housing costs as a proportion of gross income Percentage
Wales	15·67	108·65	14·4
South-east England	19·57	133·03	14·7
East Anglia	16·71	121·02	13·8
Scotland	12·76	128·97	9·9
England	15·35	115·20	13·3
United Kingdom	16·08	121·56	13·2

* Housing costs are shown net of rent and rates rebates.

Civil Servants (Secondment)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of the secondment of Mr. Dick Clements from the Department of Health and Social Security to Hospital Hygiene Services, she will revise the rules governing the secondment of civil servants to companies closely connected with the work for which their parent Department is responsible.

The Prime Minister: No. Care was taken to avoid possible conflicts of interest when Mr. Clements was granted leave to take up an outside appointment, and he has since resigned from the Civil Service.

EC (Subsidised Food and Wine)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to oppose the sale, at subsidised prices, of food and wine to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe; and what powers are available to Her Majesty's Government in the various Councils of Ministers to seek to achieve this objective.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 24 April 1985, c. 462]: The Government's policy is to reduce the need for subsidised exports through measures designed to curb the production of Community surpluses for which there is no economic outlet. Where there are surpluses for export, the Government remain opposed to singling out particular countries for special treatment.

Decisions on the fixing of export refunds and sales out of intervention are taken by the Commission, subject to the opinion of the management committee. If a sufficient majority of members states vote against a Commission proposal in the management committee, then it has to be referred to the Council of Ministers, which may take a different decision by qualified majority vote.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anglo-Irish Encounter Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Belfast, South on 15 April, Official Report, column 34 (a) whether the Anglo-Irish Encounter Group approached his Department for funding, (b) what arrangements exist between his Department and the Anglo-Irish Encounter Group to ensure that the funds supplied by his Department are properly administered, (c) how the sums of £17,000 in 1983-84, £20,000 in 1984-85 and £24,000 in 1985-86 for the use of the Encounter Group were arrived at and (d) if he will place in the Library a report showing the work which has been facilitated by his Department's funding of the Encounter Group.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is as follows:

(a) When Anglo-Irish Encounter was set up in 1983 (Hansard of 28 July 1983 Cols. 1329-1331) both Governments agreed to offer it financial support.

(b) The British section of Encounter, which keep separate books, submits independently audited accounts for inspection by my officials.

(c) Within a ceiling of £24,000 Her Majesty's Government allocated the sums mentioned on the basis of proposals submitted by Encounter.

(d) I am arranging for reports produced by Encounter on its first two conferences to be placed in the Library. A similar report on its third conference is currently in preparation.

Anglo-Irish Economic Steering Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 April to the hon. Member for Belfast, South, Official Report, column 202, which Departments were involved in the meeting of the Anglo-Irish Economic Steering Group in Dublin in March 1980.

Mr. Renton: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Northern Ireland Office.

Albania

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 18 April, Official Report, column 252-53, if Her Majesty's Government will initiate discussions within the Tripartite Commission for the Restitution of Monetary Gold with a view to an amicable arrangement being reached with the Government of Albania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Confidential discussions take place within the Tripartite Commission for the Restitution of Monetary Gold and between the member Government, whenever it is considered appropriate.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report, the letter from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Monklands, West dated 29 March concerning the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: Yes. The text is as follows:

"I enjoyed your thoughtful contribution to the adjournment debate on 14 March on the Falkland Islands and Argentina, though I must reject your charges of "intransigence": as I said in winding up, it is we who have made the running in seeking more normal bilateral relations with Argentina. Unfortunately shortage of time prevented me from dealing with other points you made. You have since gone over some of the ground when you called on our Falkland Islands Department, to prepare for your meeting with Argentine Parliamentarians at the seminar in Bonn on 27 March on the European Community and Argentina; Andrew Palmer tells me that you would welcome written comments from me on some of the points in your speech.

You urge us to take due account of the democratic nature of the present Argentine Government and their opposition to the Junta. We certainly regard President Alfonsin's criticism of the invasion at the time as a courageous act. But he complained of the means employed, and not of the cause the Junta were pursuing; his commitment to Argentina's claim to the Falklands is as inflexible as anyone's.

You will know that the Prime Minister publicly welcomed the restoration of democracy in Argentina in December 1983. She sent President Alfonsin a personal message on the occasion of his inauguration, and we have taken a number of initiatives since to achieve more normal relations. The obstacle to progress continues to be Argentine intransigence. It was their departure from a carefully agreed formula that resulted in the deadlock at the Berne talks in July 1984. Only last week President Alfonsin reiterated, on this occasion to a joint meeting of the United States Congress in Washington, that Argentina insisted that any discusion of normalisation was only possible if sovereignty were also to be discussed (I attach the text of his remarks).

You mentioned a possible role for the Secretary General of the United Nations. During the conflict, the Secretary General played an important part in attempts to secure the withdrawal of Argentine forces from the Falkland Islands. But since hostilities ceased we have taken the view that it is better for the Argentines and ourselves to conduct our exchanges through the Swiss and Brazilian Protecting Powers, without any intermediary. In his report to the United Nations General Assembly last year, Sr Perez de Cuellar expressed the hope that there could be a dialogue coupled with the adoption of confidence-building measures. The Government's policy, to seek to improve bilateral relations with Argentina through agreement on practical measures of benefit to both sides, is fully consistent with Sr Perez de Cuellar's sensible and pragmatic approach. As Geoffrey Howe said in the House on 14 March, reciprocal lifting of commercial and financial restrictions could be a natural starting point, and we have reiterated our readiness to accept a properly supervised visit to the Islands by relatives of Argentine servicemen buried there.

You made in your speech a comparison in general terms between the Government's handling of the future of Hong Kong and of the Falklands. There is a major difference between the two cases. The lease from China of 92 per cent. of the area of Hong Kong is due to expire on 1997. In these circumstances, we believe the arrangements we have made to be the best possible to maintain Hong Kong's stability and prosperity, enabling its people to plan peacefully and confidently for the future. But no such deadline governs the future of the Falkland Islands, and the 1982 invasion makes it impossible for us to discuss sovereignty with the Argentines. We do not, therefore, consider there to be a parallel between the two cases.

You discussed the cost of defending the Falklands. I covered your main point in my concluding remarks—column 582. You courteously deferred to Tam Dalyell on the per capita cost of defending the Islands. In fact your figure was accurate, and he was wrong. But in either case, as I said in the debate, the level of expenditure should come down sharply once the airport at Mount Pleasant has been completed. Total government expenditure in connection with the Falkland Islands from 2 April 1982 until the end of the current financial year is forecast at approximately £2,113 million, which breaks down as follows:

	£ million
Operation Corporate (Falklands Campaign)	780
MOD PES Supplements
1983-84	*624
1984-85	*684
FCO (ODA) assistance (rehabilitation and development projects)	25
Total	2,113

* garrison capital and running costs, plus campaign costs.

You will see that the overwhelming proportion of this is the cost of recovering the Islands, replacement costs, and the construction of Mount Pleasant Airport."

United Kingdom Nationals (Foreign Prisons)

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom nationals are held in foreign prisons; and how many have home addresses in Scotland.

Mr. Renton: As at 23 April 1985 we know of 1,070 British citizens and British Dependent Territories citizens held in foreign prisons. Of these, 51 had given home addresses in Scotland.

DEFENCE

Land Acquisitions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total value of land which his Department has brought from the Church of England in each year since 1979 and the amount of territory, in value and acreage terms, acquired by means of compulsory purchase orders during the same period.

Mr. Lee: I regret that records are not maintained in a form which provides details of land acquired from specified vendors and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. There have been no compulsory purchase orders during the period in question.

Trident and Cruise Missiles

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has made to the survey conducted in Paisley regarding nuclear weapons Trident and cruise, which was sent to him by Mrs. Truss on 19 March.

Mr. Lee: A letter dated 20 March 1985 was received from Mrs. Truss shortly thereafter. A reply was sent to her on 10 April. I am sending a copy to the hon. Gentleman.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary Vessels

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to announce orders for the new class of Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels.

Mr. Lee: Tenders have been invited for the first two Auxiliary Oiler Replenishment vessels but no decisions have yet been taken on the size and timing of orders.

Army Manning and Record Offices

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he will be announcing his response to his Department's Council of Civil Service Union's observations on the proposed redeployment of the army manning and record offices.

Mr. Lee: The announcement made on 10 January of the Department's proposals to relocate the Army manning and record and pay offices from their present eight locations to two, Glasgow and Leicester, was followed by a formal period of consultation with the MOD trades unions who forwarded their detailed comments just after Easter. In parallel there have been representations from hon. Members on both sides of the House, from local councils and others. These are now being evaluated. The various points made will be fully taken into account by Ministers before a final decision is taken. It is hoped to be able to make an announcement by the end of May or early in June.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what role the United States National Guard has played in the preparations for Exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: None.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has drawn up a final list of key points to be defended for Exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: The list of exercise key points has not yet been finalised.

United States Hospital, Little Rissington

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to operate United States Forces, Europe, hospitals such as that at Little Rissington in conjunction with British civil emergency war time services.

Mr. Lee: United States emergency hospitals in the United Kingdom, when activated at the time of an emergency, would be used primarily to treat United States casualties and so reduce the burden on United Kingdom emergency services. The planned use for such United States hospitals is developed in close consultation with United Kingdom emergency resources.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Forces, Europe, hospital at Little Rissington is equipped to operate in a nuclear and chemical environment.

Mr. Lee: RAF Little Rissington is a United States Air Force peacetime storage and wartime hospital facility. The hospital naturally incorporates protective measures against a range of potential wartime threats.

Russian Special Purpose Forces

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest information about the Russian special forces Spetsnaz.

Mr. Stanley: The Soviet Union's special purpose forces — SPETSNAZ — are subordinate to the Main Intelligence Directorate (GRU) of the Soviet General Staff. They are organised into brigades, each of which can field a number of relatively small teams trained to conduct special or covert reconnaissance and sabotage operations. In wartime they would operate far behind the enemy lines, most units providing reconnaissance and target marking, others mounting sabotage attacks on selected important installations and depots, airfields, air defence and command, control and communications facilities. SPETSNAZ forces make a significant contribution to Soviet combat capabilities.

Faslane (Substances)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature and chemical content of substances which are being taken from Faslane to Glenboig for dumping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The dumping contract to which the hon. Member refers has been placed by the Property Services Agency. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment will write to the hon. Member with such details as are available as to the scientific content of the substances being moved.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Clothing (Imports)

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what limitations there are on the importation of articles of apparel and clothing accessories from (a) Taiwan, (b) South Korea and (c) Romania; and why one differs from another.

Mr. Channon: The quotas for 1985 are as follows:

* Including garments of textile fabric of tariff heading numbers 59.08, 59.11 or 59.12.

† For judo, karate, kung fu, taekwondo and similar martial arts suits there is additional quota of 23,000 pieces.

‡ Excluding garments of textile fabric of tariff heading numbers 59.08, 59.11 or 59.12.

The quotas on South Korea and Romania were negotiated with those countries by the European Commission under the provisions of the multi-fibre arrangement (MFA). Taiwan is subject to an autonomous regime.

Articles 3 and 4 of the MFA lay down the circumstances in which quotas may be introduced. Quota coverage, and the levels for particular quotas, may differ from one exporting country to another for a variety of reasons. For example, the development of trade in particular products from the exporting country in question, and United Kingdom market conditions, are taken into account. Quotas may also be subject to different annual growth rates; in general, the major exporting countries have accepted the lowest growth rates.

Waste

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report specific new proposals to be implemented by the new Minister for waste; and what funding is available to finance the proposals.

Mr. Trippier: I have been appointed to undertake a co-ordinating role, not to take on the responsibilities of other Departments concerned with recycling.

In my new role, I shall, of course, be consulting other Departments and other interested parties. Any new proposals which emerge, and involving financial support from the Government, will be contained within existing public expenditure programmes.

"Support for Business"

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent responses he has received to his publication "Support for Business".

Mr. Trippier: I have had no direct responses, but well over 200 telephone calls a week about DTI assistance are already coming into the new London central inquiry point whose number is given in "Support for Business". The alternative regional inquiry points are also receiving calls in response to the booklet.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department proposes to take to encourage the growth of manufacturing industries in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My Department aims to encourage the growth of manufacturing industry through the creation of a climate which encourages enterprise and in which business can become more competitive. It also gives various forms of assistance to business, including manufacturing industry.

Bricks

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received alleging anti-competitive practices in the pricing of fletton bricks over the past 18 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend has received no representations on this subject.

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the subject of the manufacture and supply of fletton bricks.

Mr. Fletcher: References to the Commission of possible monopoly situations or anti-competitive practices are a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading.

British Telecom (Shares)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) why some British Telecommunications shares applied for by British Telecommunications employees and pensioners were not allotted;

(2) whether employees and pensioners were given undertakings prior to the sale of British Telecommunications shares that they would be allocated all the shares for which they applied.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary System

12. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conditions he would wish to exist before he recommends the participation of the United Kingdom in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We would want in particular to be satisfied that participation was consistent with the effective conduct of our domestic policies and that undue instability would not be introduced into the exchange rate mechanism itself.

Money Gross Domestic Product

16. Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consider ways by which figures about money gross domestic product may be ascertained and published nearer to the period to which they relate.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have no plans to do so.

Football Pools

17. Mr. Boyes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the level of tax paid by football pools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Representations seeking a reduction in pool betting duty have been received from the Football League, a number of football clubs and pool promoters.

Personal Taxation

18. Mr. Merchant asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish his proposed Green Paper on personal taxation.

23. Mr. Maude asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the Green Paper on personal taxation.

Mr. Lawson: Later this year.

Export Performance

19. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how Britain's export performance compares with its European partners; and what are the future prospects for exports following the Budget.

Mr. Peter Rees: Our export performance compares satisfactorily with our European partners and future prospects are good.

National Insurance Contributions

20. Mr. Chope asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received about the effects of his Budget proposal to reduce national insurance contributions in respect of the lower paid.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The reductions in national insurance contributions in respect of the lower paid which my right hon. Friend announced in his Budget were greeted with widespread approval. We have received around 40 letters about the abolition of the upper earnings limit for employers' contributions.

Small Businesses

21. Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from small businesses concerning his recent Budget proposals.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Several and on a variety of points.

Budget (Job Creation)

22. Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding his Budget proposals and the likely effect on unemployment levels.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Government have received many representations commending them for introducing a Budget that will increase employment.

36. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has made any up-to-date assessment of employment trends following his Budget statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: The most recent employment estimates, published since the Budget, indicate further substantial growth in the employed labour force in the fourth quarter of 1984, bringing the total increase in the year to December 1984 to about 340,000. Thus there is a strong rising trend in employment, and prospects have been improved substantially by the measures announced in my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

38. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs the cut in national insurance contributions in the recent Budget will create.

Mr. Peter Rees: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar).

Stamp Office (Birmingham)

24. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an official visit to the Stamp Office in Birmingham.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. If my hon. Friend has a particular point in mind, perhaps he will let me have the details and I will be happy to look into it.

Worker Co-operatives

25. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will introduce fiscal measures to encourage the development of worker co-operatives.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Several of the fiscal measures we have already introduced will have assisted worker co-operatives.

VAT (Charities)

26. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had in relation to the impact on the quantity of advertising by charitable organisations of the introduction of value added tax.

Mr. Barney Hayhoe: The representations indicate that there is likely to be some reduction in the amount of advertising as a result of the tax.

Construction Industry

27. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had on his Budget from the construction industry.

Mr. Peter Rees: Several, on a variety of topics.

39. Mr. Stern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effects of the proposed abolition of development land tax on employment in the construction industry.

Mr. Peter Rees: The abolition of development land tax removes a disincentive to the availability of land for development. The effects on construction output and employment should be favourable.

Taxation Policy

28. Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's long-term taxation policy.

Mr. Moore: Consistently with the MTFS, the Government aim to reduce the overall tax burden and reform and simplify the tax system so as to improve incentives, reward success and thereby improve the supply-side performance of the economy.

Interest Rates

29. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his current policy objectives for interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made clear in his Budget speech, short-term interest rates will be held at the level needed to maintain monetary conditions that will continue to bring down inflation.

VAT (Glass and Glazing Industry)

30. Mr. Holt asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the aggregate yield from value added tax from the glass and glazing industry since value added tax was first introduced.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the data on consumers' expenditure in this sector, on which an estimate would have to be based, are not sufficiently detailed to provide the information requested.

Manufacturing Industry

31. Mr. Strang asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the volume of investment in manufacturing industry in the last financial year; and how this compares with the level in 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Rees: Manufacturing investment rose by 13 per cent. in 1984 with a further substantial increase expected in 1985. The total of £6·1 billion in 1984, the last full year for which data are available, remains below the 1978-79 level.

Business Expansion Scheme

32. Mr. John Browne asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend the business expansion scheme class of investors to include fathers and other close family members.

Mr. Moore: The business expansion scheme is designed to help small companies raise equity investment from individuals not otherwise connected with the business. For this purpose, certain close relatives of the proprietor are treated as connected. There are no plans to change the rules of the business expansion scheme, apart from the proposed changes announced by my right hon. Friend in his Budget statement on 19 March.

Married Man's Tax Allowance

33. Ms. Clare Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of his proposal to abolish married man's tax allowance and replace it with two single tax allowances payable on request to each or either spouse.

Mr. Moore: The cost will depend upon a number of factors, principally the level of the single allowance under the new system. The issues will be fully discussed in the forthcoming Green Paper.

Income Tax

34. Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any long-term plans to move to a flat rate of income tax.

Mr. Moore: I have no plans to do so.

European Community Budget

35. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net contribution which the United Kingdom will make to the European Economic Community in the calendar year 1985, including any advance payments contributions.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Estimates of the United Kingdom's net contribution are not produced for calendar years as these are not an accounting period for the purposes of United Kingdom public expenditure. The Government's latest estimate of the net contribution to the European Economic Community for the financial year 1985-86 was recently published in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428). An updated estimate taking account of all relevant factors will, as is usual, be published in the Autumn Statement.

Economic Activity

37. Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding further signs of an increase in economic activity.

Mr. Peter Rees: The March CBI economic situation report foresaw continued growth of total employment through 1985, with further increases in manufacturing output. Non-oil exports were up 11 per cent. in the three months to February compared with a year earlier.

Customs and Excise (Computer)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report progress on the installation of the Customs and Excise departmental reference and information computer indicating (a) when the system was ordered, (b) when it was installed, (c) when he expects it to become operational and (d) what is the total estimated cost of the system, including software; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The system was ordered on 10 May 1982, installed in October 1982 and became operational on 1 March 1983. It is at present working satisfactorily. The cost of the system was approximately £500,000.

Customs Investigations Division

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what functions in respect of licensing and other matters the Customs investigation division has carried out since 1980.

Mr. Hayhoe: The investigation division investigates offences relating to matters assigned to the Commissioners of Customs and Excise including the evasion of import and export licensing controls, the smuggling of drugs and other prohibited and dutiable goods, the evasion of revenue and frauds involving value added tax and common agricultural policy levies.

Disabled Persons (Water Closets)

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why, under the Value Added Tax (Handicapped Persons and Charities) Order 1982, Group 14, the Customs and Excise has given approval for a range of special water closets to be purchased free of value added tax by chronically sick or disabled persons, but has refused approval to specially designed toilet seats to be used on such water closets.

Mr. Hayhoe: Water closets which have been designed solely for use by chronically sick and disabled persons are relieved of VAT when supplied to such persons for their personal or domestic use, and a toilet seat which is itself so specially designed, or designed for use only with an eligible water closet, is also relieved when supplied in the same circumstances. If my hon. Friend is aware of a problem in this area, perhaps he would write to me about it.

Off-Street Parking (VAT)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue raised in the most recent year for which figures are available through value added tax on off-street parking charges, including excess fees paid in this respect; and how this compares with the past five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: Businesses registered for value added tax are not required to make returns of the tax charged on particular supplies of goods or services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. Nor is it possible in this case to provide an estimate based on consumers' expenditure, as the information available is not sufficiently detailed.

Motor Cars (VAT)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue raised in the most recent year for which figures are available through value added tax on servicing and repairs of motor cars; how this compares with the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Businesses registered for value added tax are not required to make returns of the tax charged on particular supplies of goods and services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. The figures are based on estimates of consumers' expenditure.

*1979-80	105

* The standard rate of VAT was raised from 8 per cent. to 15 per cent. from 18 June 1979.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue raised in the most recent year for which figures are available through value added tax on the sale of second-hand cars; how this compares with the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Businesses registered for value added tax are not required to make returns of the tax charged on particular supplies of goods and services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. The estimates are based on consumers' expenditure data. I regret that the data for 1979-80 are insufficiently reliable to enable an estimate to be made.

Trustee Savings Banks Bill

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the position of Her Majesty's Government in relation to the Trustee Savings Banks Bill, following the vote in the House of Lords to amend the Bill.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have asked the chairman of the TSB Central Board to consider as a matter of urgency the implications of the amendments made in the House of Lords to the TSB Bill, including that relating to TSB Scotland. The Government will make a further statement in due course.

Working Wives

Mr. Ashley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many working wives opt for separate income tax assessment; and what proportion this is of those eligible to do so.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Ashley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many married couples claim the maximum amount of mortgage tax relief; and what proportion this is of all married couples.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Budget Council)

Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the EC Budget Council on 23 April.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made earlier today.

SCOTLAND

Cormorants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice for methods of deterring cormorants were given in (a) cases where licences were not granted and (b) cases where licences were granted in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: In Scotland licences are granted to kill cormorants to prevent damage to stocks of salmon and trout throughout open water fisheries. We are not aware of any successful method of deterring cormorants in such circumstances.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Nature Conservancy Council was consulted over each application for a licence to kill cormorants in 1984 and so far in 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: As I indicated in reply to a question from the hon. Gentleman on 4 April, at column 735, it would be impracticable to consult the Nature Conservancy Council about individual applications relating to the protection of fisheries.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the conditions of the licence to kill cormorants make it clear that the licence is only for the purpose of preventing serious damage.

Mr. John MacKay: The conditions attached to licences to kill cormorants make it clear that they are only for the purpose of preventing damage to fisheries.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if any research is being undertaken (a) to assess the number and size of fish taken by cormorants and the extent of their impact on fisheries and (b) to look at methods of deterring or scaring cormorants from areas where they are considered to be causing damage.

Mr. John MacKay: No research is currently being undertaken by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland into these subjects.

Edinburgh Western Relief Road

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will come forward with a confirmation Bill, following on the parliamentary inquiry into the proposed Edinburgh western relief road.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend intends to introduce a Bill to confirm the Lothian region (Edinburgh Western Relief Road) Provisional Order, as modified, after the relevant plans have been received and a transcript of the evidence given at the inquiry has been placed in the Library of each House.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private sector improvement grants, including repair, conversion and standard grants, were approved in Scotland in each year from 1970 to 1984.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table.

Improvement grants to private owners—applications approved

Year	Number of dwellings
1970	5,846
1971	7,189
1972	16,053
1973	22,388
1974	24,474
1975	8,008
1976	7,402
1977	7,422
1978	8,605
1979	10,248
1980	12,827
1981	15,156
1982	30,471
1983	77,733
1984	34,629

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent on improvement grants in real terms, at constant prices, in Scotland in each financial year from 1970-71 to 1984-85; and what is the estimated expenditure in 1985-86.

Mr. Ancram: The table shows the amounts, expressed in terms of 1983-84 prices, paid in improvement grants to private owners in Scotland in each of the calendar years 1971 to 1984. A consistent series of figures spanning the whole period is not readily available for financial years. Since expenditure on improvement grants is one component of non-HRA block expenditure, and will depend on how authorities choose to spend the resources allocated to them for that block, an estimate for 1985-86 is not available.

Year	£ million
1971	11·2
1972	29·2
1973	43·9
1974	73·3

1980	22·3
1981	27·3
1982	44·1
1983	96·3
1984	125·6

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland in what periods between 1970 and 1985 the rate of grant for housing improvement was normally 50 per cent.; and in what periods it was 90 per cent.

Mr. Ancram: The maximum rates of grant under the house improvement and repairs grant schemes between 1970 and 1985 were as follows:

	From	Rate per cent.
Improvement Conversion	30 August 1968	50
	23 June 1971	75
	1 October 1973	50

Repairs (Lead plumbing works)	13 April 1982	90
	1 April 1984	75

* Or up to 90 per cent. in cases of hardship.

Waste Substances (Transport)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what route is followed in the transport of waste substances between Faslane and Glenboig; if he is satisfied that no risk to public health or safety arises from the transport of such substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I understand that the contract awarded to Messrs. Shanks and McEwan involves the removal of waste by sea and road. The company's method statement is under discussion with the Health and Safety Executive, who will ensure that it fully safeguards public health and safety. The transport of the waste, could not, I am advised, in itself, give rise to risk to public health, but the company's proposed methods will include contingency measures against the remote chance of spillage arising from a road traffic accident.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name, by county, those deciduous woodlands which have been (a) clearfelled and replanted with conifers and (b) clearfelled for agriculture under the terms of a Forestry Commission licence since January 1984.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1985, c. 249]: The information is not available in the form requested as the Forestry Commission does not normally monitor the situation on the ground after granting a felling licence, unless replanting conditions are involved and these conditions are due to have been fulfilled. I can, however, list the woodlands for which licences were issued during the period 1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985; these are as follows:

Name	County/Region
(a) Broadleaved woodland licensed for clearfelling and replanting with confifers:
Bolderton Drive	Cheshire
Woods at Warren Lane	Berkshire
(b) Broadleaved woodland licensed for clearfelling for conversion of the land to agriculture:

Fron Wood	Powys
Treowen Woods	Gwent
Gaer House Wood	Gwent
Woodlands on Ty Uchaf Farm	Gwent
Woodlands on Cwm Nosydd Farm	Gwent
Allt Tanteg Wood	Dyfed

The total area under (a) was 2·1 hectares; the total area under (b) was 125·5 hectares of which one woodland of 17 hectares comprised a crop of poplar grown for matchwood.

Twenty-eight broadleaved woodlands were licensed for clearfelling for conversion to agriculture during the period January to March 1984; 31 woodlands were covered by such licences during the following 12 months.

Scottish Tourist Board

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the grants over £10,000 given by the Scottish Tourist Board to aid tourist development projects in each of the last five years specifying also where appropriate the ultimate holding company of the recipient of grant.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1985, c. 16]: The information is set out in the following table. Individual grants are not listed but have been banded as follows:

Assistance category	Grants in the range £
(1)	10,000 – 24,999
(2)	25,000 – 49,999

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Gibraltar Dockyard

41. Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what terms and conditions the management agents operate Gibraltar dockyard.

Mr. Raison: A. and P. Appledore International Ltd. manages Gibraltar Shiprepair Ltd. and is paid a fixed annual fee or a fixed percentage of the operating profit, whichever is the greater.

European Development Fund (Contracts)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), 15 April 1985, Official Report, column 18, he will state the cumulative percentage share of British contracts gained under EDF V in African, Caribbean and Pacific countries.

Mr. Raison: The cumulative British share of contracts under EDF V advertised and let within African, Caribbean and Pacific countries was 6·8 per cent. at the end of December 1984. ACP countries themselves gained 70 per cent. of these contracts.

Overseas Aid (Forestry)

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount of Government funds that have been invested through the Commonwealth Development Corporation and Overseas Development Administration with a view to encouraging forestry in tropical areas abroad.

Mr. Raison: Government funds invested in tropical forestry through the Commonwealth Development Corporation and the Overseas Development Administration support both technical co-operation and specific projects, some larger and some small. Expenditure and new commitments on the large projects between 1980 and 1984 was:

Year	Expenditure £ million	New Commitments £ million
1980	2·805	0·429
1981	3·161	0·381
1982	4·145	1·776
1983	3·592	1·799
1984	5·155	25·380

Crown Agents (Netting Stations)

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many netting stations are owned by the Crown Agents; where they are located; and what was the annual weight of catch in the years 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Raison: The Crown Agents do not own any netting stations.

TRANSPORT

Train Services

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 4 April, Official Report, column 745, about Sunday services on British Rail, if he will publish for 1984 the number of occasions when Sunday train services differed from the published timetables and the principal causes of such differences.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested by my hon. Friend is not readily available. The principal reasons why Sunday train services may differ from the published timetable is weekend engineering work.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 16 April, Official Report, columns 150-1, about the punctuality of train services, if he will give for the lines referred to, the average amount of recovery time included for the journeys in the timetables.

Mr. David Mitchell: The times are as follows:

	†Normal recovery time (minutes)	‡Additional recovery time (minutes)
Glasgow-Euston*	‖23	8
Birmingham-Euston*	8	8
Liverpool and Manchester-Euston*	8	8

† Normal recovery time added to all services.

‡ Additional recovery time added to services travelling over the Rugby-Euston section between 10 am and 5 pm on Mondays to Fridays to allow for track maintenance undertaken between these hours.

‖ This recovery time is made up as follows:

	Minutes
Glasgow-Carlisle	7
Carlisle-Crewe	8
Rugby-Euston	8

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will ask the chairman of British Rail to collect information on the punctuality of trains at intermediate stations as well as at terminating stations.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have endorsed British Rail's objective of improved punctuality. How it achieves those standards and how it monitors them are matters of management for the board.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, how many representations he has received about the punctuality of trains at intermediate stations on inter-city lines.

Mr. David Mitchell: Fifty-five during the whole of 1984, of which six came from Members of Parliament.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will make a statement about train time-keeping as set out in paragraphs 96 to 99 in the report of the Transport Users' Consultative Committee Yorkshire area, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. David Mitchell: I welcome the considerable effort that TUCCs in Yorkshire, and elsewhere, have put into making a sample survey of punctuality at intermediate stations.

Motorways (Communications System)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will identify where the responsibility lies for the public communications system on all motorways in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: In England, emergency telephones are provided for accidents and breakdowns on all motorways by the Department of Transport. Public communications systems are provided by British Telecom at service stations.

Roads

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the amount spent in 1984 on (a) construction of new roads, (b) road repairs funded directly by his Department and (c) road repairs funded by local authorities.

Mrs. Chalker: The latest information available for roads in England is as follows:

£ million

	New Road Construction		Road Repairs/Maintenance
	1983-84	1984-85	1983-84	1984-85
National road system (directly funded)	523	576	183	*218
Local authority roads	440	†491	738	‡812

* Provisional outturn.

† Provision.

‡ Estimate.

The outturn figures for local authorities in 1984-85 will not be available until later this year.

Cyclists

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has following the recent changes in the transport supplementary grant system, to encourage local authorities to make provision for cyclists on local roads.

Mrs. Chalker: It continues to be our policy to provide information, help and advice to local authorities in developing their policies for cyclists.

Felixstowe Dock and Railway Bill

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken by Her Majesty' Government to evaluate the national, industrial and commercial implications of the Felixstowe Dock and Railway Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The industrial and commercial implications are matters for the judgment of the Felixstowe Dock and Railway Company, which is promoting the Bill. I cannot anticipate the views that will be expressed on behalf of the Government when the Bill has its Second Reading.

Grain Dryer, Swarland (Access)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department was consulted about access from the A1 for heavy vehicles to the proposed grain dryer at Swarland, Northumberland, before planning permission was issued.

Mrs. Chalker: No. In a case of this nature the local plannng authority is required to consult my Department only where it appears to it that the development is likely to create or attract traffic which will result in a material increase in the volume of traffic entering or leaving a trunk road. I assume that the local planning authority—in this case Alnwick district council—did not consider that the proposed grain dryer at Swarland would be likely to create or attract such traffic.

NBC (Employees' Pensions)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what orders he intends to make under section 50 of the Transport Bill to guarantee the future pension provision for employees of the National Bus Company.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to make such orders. Benefits which employees have accrued in the National Bus Company's pension funds are protected by the funds' rules and backed by their assets.

M25 (Completion)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 359, what penalty clauses are in operation in respect of late completion of outstanding sections of the M25; what is his policy (a) in awarding contracts for motorway construction and (b) in attaching penalty clauses for late completion; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: All the contracts for sections of the M25 now being completed contain provisions for the payment of a predetermined amount of liquidated damages by the contractor for each day he exceeds the authorised period for completion.

My policy is to award contracts for motorway constructon to the firm submitting the lowest acceptable offer, following competitive tendering by civil engineering contractors selected for their record of achieving good work, on time, and at competitive prices.

The tender invitations documents state the period in which the works are to be completed, together with the amount of liquidated damages due for each day that period is exceeded by the contractor.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Birds

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of licences he issued (a) in 1984 and (b) so far in 1985 to kill birds under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and, in each case giving the species of bird involved, the number allowed to be killed, the location and the reason.

Mrs. Fenner: Details of licences issued by my Department in 1984 and 1985, for the killing of wild birds under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, are set out in the following tables.

Food Labelling

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the implications for manufacturers of vitamin supplements of his Department's proposed food labelling regulations.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government's present intentions for the fat content labelling and nutrition labelling of foods do not contain any special implications for manufacturers of vitamin supplements beyond those applicable to all food manufacturers.

Grain (Industrial Feeding Stock)

Mr. Wareing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what organisations he has consulted about the economics of using European Economic Community surplus grain as industrial feeding stock; and if he has discussed the matter with the French Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department has discussed the use of grain for industrial purposes — including, of course, use by the food industry—mainly in the context of the Commission's proposals for changes in the Community starch regime, with a wide range of organisations representing United Kingdom producers and users of grain and its derivatives. Discussion is continuing at a Community level, involving the Commission and all member states.

Federal Republic of Germany (Food Imports)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in view of the non-compliance of the Federal Republic of Germany with the instructions of the European Commission about the import of East German dried egg and other foodstuffs, he will make a statement on the action being taken by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. MacGregor: My officials are pursuing the problems in respect of dried egg imports from East Germany in the management committee for eggs and poultrymeat.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ice Rink (Castlereagh)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total cost, including printing and distribution, of the leaflet relating to the proposed ice rink which Castlereagh borough council is sending to all households in the borough prior to the local government elections.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no information about this district council matter.

Community Centres, Castlereagh

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received an application from Castlereagh borough council to sanction the raising of a loan for the major extension scheme to the Braniel community centre in Castlereagh borough; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: No.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date he received an application from Castlereagh borough council for sanction to raise a loan for the proposed new Belvoir community centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 14 November 1984 an application was received from Castlereagh borough council for sanction to borrow £9,300 to acquire a site for a proposed community centre at Belvoir. This was granted on 6 December.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if a Government grant will be made available for the proposed new Braniel community centre in Castlereagh borough;

(2) if a Government grant will be made available for the proposed new Belvoir community centre in Castlereagh borough.

Mr. Scott: Funds available for sport, recreation and community provision, as for provisions in other areas, are limited; these applications will have to be considered in conjunction with many other schemes regarded as priorities by all the district councils, and in the light of other higher priority schemes planned by Castlereagh borough council.

Anglo-Irish Encounter Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answer of 16 April, Official Report, column 132, for what purpose 10 officials from the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments have attended conferences organised by Encounter.

Mr. Hurd: My officials accepted invitations to attend Encounter's conferences because of their interest in the subjects under discussion.

Action for Community Employment Schemes

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will state the number of action for community employment schemes workers who receive (a) more than 90 per cent. and (b) less than 90 per cent. of their wages funded from the Department of Economic Development; what is the total cost; if he will list each of the projects and organisations to which they are attached and the estimated cost to public funds in each case; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many action for community employment schemes workers are currently receiving 90 per cent. funding of their wages from the Department of Economic Development; what is the total cost; and if he will list each of the projects and organisations to which they are attached and the estimated cost to public funds in each case.

Dr. Boyson: The wages grant for ACE employees is 90 per cent. of the sum of the wage and the employer's national insurance contribution up to a maximum of £98 per employee per week. No ACE employee receives more than this maximum grant. Sponsors of higher paid workers have to fund the amount in excess of £98 per week from their own resources.

The total estimated cost of the programme in the current year is £18·5 million representing an average of 3,900 jobs.

To list the number of workers and each project would incur disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Treasury Offices (Energy Audit)

40. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an energy audit on major offices under the control of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 24 April at column 464.

Cadmium

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken by his Department in the light of the recommendations of the Food Additives and Contaminants Committee in food surveillance paper No. 12 that industry should find alternatives to cadmium and that efforts should be made to reduce pollution of the environment by cadmium.

Mr. Waldegrave: The observations and recommendations of the Food Additives and Contaminants Committee in food surveillance paper No. 12 are welcomed. They are in line with the Government's policy to keep man's total intake of cadmium as low as practicable. As recommended by the committee, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has initiated a survey of the food contact uses, if any, of cadmium pigmented plastics.

My Department published comprehensive guidance in 1983 on the disposal of wastes containing cadmium (Waste Management paper No. 24) and continues to keep environmental exposure to cadmium under review.

Nuclear Waste Dumping

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any part of the Yeovil constituency has been or is being investigated for the location of a nuclear waste dumping site.

Mr. Waldegrave: The selection of possible sites for disposal facilities is a matter for the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive (NIREX). My right hon. Friend said in his statement of 24 January, at column 146, that, after NIREX has selected and announced the sites it considers merit detailed investigation, he will make a special development order and lay it before the House to authorise such investigations.

Metropolitan Districts (Manpower)

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the manpower of the metropolitan districts, separately and in aggregate, broken down by service, showing full-time, part-time and full-time equivalents, for June of each year 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Rating

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1978, the rateable value and number of hereditaments in each of the following categories (a) domestic, (b) commercial, (c) industrial, (d) other undertakings, (e) entertainment and recreational, (f) educational and cultural, (g) miscellaneous and (h) the grand total for England and the metropolitan counties separately and in total.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed the information requested in the Library.

Homes (Letting)

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet in a position to announce the outcome of his consideration of the implications of the Court of Appeal decision, Pocock v. Steel on the letting of homes in the United Kingdom by people working abroad.

Mr. Gow: I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Merseyside

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his visit to Merseyside on 22 and 23 April; and what practical and financial assistance to Liverpool will result from it.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I visited Merseyside on 22 and 23 April 1985 to review progress on some of the initiatives launched in the area in recent years.

I arrived on the evening of 22 April to attend one of the regular meetings that Halton borough council holds with members of the local business community at the invitation of the leader of the council. I offered to consider urban programme help with premises for a proposed new development agency for the borough. On the morning of 23 April I held a press conference in Liverpool where I made a statement and answered questions about the Liverpool city action team.

I then visited the site of the former Courtaulds factory at Aintree, which is now in the hands of private developers, who, with the help of derelict land grant, are reclaiming the site for industrial use. I was pleased to learn that jobs with firms on the industrial estate now nearly equal the jobs lost when Courtaulds closed.

I later visited Cammell Laird (Shipbuilders) Ltd, Birkenhead, and met the managing director and the shop stewards' committee. I was also able to see work in progress on the type 42 destroyer, HMS Edinburgh, which it is constructing in its yard.

After lunch, I toured the Liverpool freeport where I met the freeport manager and representatives of the two companies established within the freeport area. One, a textile firm already employs about 40 people, most of whom were unemployed before the freeport was established.

The visit enabled me to satisfy myself at first hand that the substantial public funds made available to these projects are being used to best effect.

The matter of Liverpool city council's budget was not discussed during the visit. I have made it quite clear on numerous occasions that I am not prepared to reopen discussions on this year's rate support grant. The responsibility for setting a legal budget rests fairly and squarely with the city council.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will pay a visit to the Merseyside innovation centre;

(2) if he will visit the Merseyside Economic Development Company and its subsidiaries in the near future.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have no plans at present to visit either Merseyside innovation centre or Merseyside Economic Development Company.

Water Research Centre

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the studies commissioned from the Water Research Centre by his Department in (a) 1979, (b) 1980, (c) 1981, (d) 1982 and (e) 1983, respectively; and if he will place copies of these reports in the Library;

(2) if he will list the titles of the projects commissioned by his Department from the Water Research Centre which are in the process of completion; and if he will undertake to place copies of the reports of these projects in the Library within a month of their completion.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his answer, 16 February 1984, c. 279-81]: I have today placed the report on biological denitrification of potable water (reference D7 in my answer of 16 February 1984) in the Library.

Docklands STOLport

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce his decision on the proposed STOLport in London Docklands as soon as the current legal proceedings have been concluded.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to the answer, 18 February 1985, c. 332]: When my Department invited comments on the new evidence last August, I said that I was minded to grant the planning appeal. The recent judicial review in the High Court rejected the case for reopening the inquiry to consider what evidence and both the GLC and Newham have now decided not to appeal. The STOLport application has raised a number of complex issues which, obviously, must be both carefully considered by me and reflected in the decision letter. I am anxious to issue my decision as soon as possible and hope to do so within two or three weeks.

Royal Parks Constabulary

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total strength of the royal parks constabulary; what is their establishment figure; and if he will break down the figures by posting.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall answer this question shortly.

Water Authorities (Members)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names, along with their occupations, of the members of the North West and Welsh water authorities.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall answer this questions shortly.

High Technology Site, Bickenhill

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will delay the public inquiries proposed for planning applications concerning the high technology site in Bickenhill until the final determination of the west midlands structure plan and the Marston Green and Bickenhill district plan; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to the progress which has been made with the process of preparing the Marston Green and Bickenhill district plan for submission to him for determination;

(3) what is his policy, arising from his review of the west midlands structure plan, concerning the release of green belt land in the west midlands; and if he will make a statement on his proposed application of this policy regarding the precise location of release of green belt land for a high technology site in Bickenhill.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall answer these questions shortly.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales requiring treatment classified urgent are currently on inpatient waiting lists; and how many of these people have been on the waiting list for one month or more.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest information is contained in "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1985, No 1", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish them total number of people on Welsh hospital outpatient waiting lists for (a) 1980, (b) 1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983 and (e) the latest available figure for 1984.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The figures, which refer to 30 September in each year, are as follows:

	Number on outpatient waiting list
1980	61,145
1981	58,597
1982	69,730
1983	70,014
1984	80,341

Quota Regulations

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute an urgent review of the 1984 quota regulations which governed the appeals procedure for secondary quotas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: No. However, in the light of the work done by the dairy produce quotas tribunal we are looking at those cases where the regulations do not provide for quota to be allocated. This review does not represent any interference in decisions taken by the tribunal on individual cases. It is simply an examination of the particular circumstances where the tribunal has been unable, because of the legal constaints upon it, to grant quota to producers. I can, of course, give no commitment as to the outcome; even if new regulations were to be introduced, the necessary quota for reallocation could not be found from elsewhere than the national quota for the United Kingdom.

Rates

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1978, the rateable value and number of hereditaments in each of the following categories: (a) domestic, (b) commercial, (c) industrial, (d) other undertakings, (e) entertainment and recreational, (f) educational and cultural, (g) miscellaneous, and (h) the grand total for Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested for the years 1978 to 1984 is contained in appendix III of the annual publications of "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library. Information for 1985 will be published later this year.

Housing Starts

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many housing starts were made in (a) January 1984, (b) February 1984, (c) January 1985 and (d) February 1985 in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of dwellings started
January 1984	483
February 1984	492
January 1985	*546
February 1985	*855

* Provisional.

Housing (Repairs)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings in Wales required repairs costing £7,000 or more, at 1981 prices, in each year from 1976 to 1981; and what is the number for today at 1981 prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information relating to the cost of repairing dwellings is collected in Welsh house condition surveys which are conducted on a periodic basis. The number of dwellings requiring repairs costing more than £7,000—at 1981 prices—was estimated at 33,000 for 1976 and 66,000 for 1981. The 1981 Welsh house condition survey excluded second homes.

New Jobs

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) number and (b) percentage of new jobs created in Wales in (i) 1981, (ii) 1982, (iii) 1983 and (iv) 1984 were part-time jobs.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information in the form requested is not available.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the level of Government spending on the National Health Service in Wales over the last 12 months in (a) real terms and (b) after allowing for pay and price increases.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: National Health Service expenditure in Wales in cash terms for 1983-84 and 1984-85 was £796 million and £860 million (provisional), respectively. The growth in real terms — calculated by adjusting actual expenditure for the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP market price deflator—was 3·4 per cent. Growth after taking into account actual movements in NHS pay and prices was 2·6 per cent.

Unfit Dwellings

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings classified unfit there were in Wales in (a) 1961, (b) 1971, (c) 1979, (d) 1981 and (e) 1984; and if in each case the number can be expressed also in percentage terms.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information relating to unfit dwellings is collected in the Welsh house condition surveys which are conducted on a periodic basis. Figures for available years are as follows:

Year	Dwellings classified unfit	Percentage of total stock
1968	91,900	10·4
1973	147,500	14·9
1976	100,200	9·8
*1981	90,900	8·8

* The Welsh House Condition Survey 1981 excluded second homes.

Housing (Grants)

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 617, about intermediate and repair grants, how many of the 50,000 applications outstanding are for repair grants.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Marple Dale Hospital, Stockport

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the sale of the Marple Dale hospital, Stockport, and associated land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that North-Western regional health authority has accepted the highest tender received for the Marple Dale hospital, Stockport, and completion of the sale is expected in the next five weeks. I suggest my hon. Friend contacts the chairman of the regional health authority for any further information he requires.

Social Security Payments

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average per person of total social security payments made per week to (a) male recipients and (b) unemployed men aged 64 years.

Mr. Whitney: The available information is based on statistical samples too small to give reliable estimates for men of a single age. Figures from the 1983 Family Expenditure Survey show an average weekly income from social security benefits of £25 for all male recipients (including men in employment receiving additional support through family income supplement or housing benefit—and £42 for unemployed men aged between 60 and 65. (This includes all benefits except child benefit and one-parent benefit.)

Child Deaths

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the children who have died while in the care of a local authority snce 1970, the dates of their death, the causes of their death in each case, their age at death, how long they had been in local authority care, and what action was taken following their death in each case.

Mr. John Patten: Full information in the form requested is not available. Annual unit returns on children in the care of local authorities are made to the Department and include information about the number of children in care who died during the year analysed by age and by the length of their most recent period in care. Cause of death is not given. The information available from these returns is contained in the Department's annual publication "Children in Care of Local Authorities", copies of which are in the Library. The number of deaths reported in the returns for the financial years 1970-71 to 1982-83 is as follows:

Year	Number
1970-71	111
1971-72	115
1972-73	115
1973-74	106
1974-75	143
1975-76	132
1976-77	100
1977-78	99
1978-79	106
1979-80	93
1980-81	104
1981-82	103
1982-83	94

Residential Care

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific guidance will be given to staff in his Department's local offices in imposing length of stay restrictions on (a) residents of hospitals, homes or supporting hostels for mentally ill, mentally handicapped, physically handicapped, alcoholic and drug misusers who are discharged into local board and lodging accommodation but who need long-term supportive care from their previous residence, (b) prisoners discharged into board and lodging accommodation who for rehabilitation reasons do not want to return to the area in which their crime was committed; and (c) current residents of board and lodging accommodation who have been established for a considerable period of time in an area that is not their area of origin, for the purposes of his Department.

Mr. Whitney: A copy of the recently issued guidance and procedural instructions of the new supplementary benefit board and lodging changes has been placed in the Library. The restriction on the period of payment as a boarder does not apply to those who have entered accommodation as part of a rehabilitation or resettlement programme under the guidance of certain caring bodies. Similarly, people who have lived at an address for six months whilst in work or while getting supplementary benefit but not required to be available for work are exempt from the restriction.

Newcastle General Hospital

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why Newcastle general hospital is the only university teaching centre in the United Kingdom not to be equipped with a laser for the treatment of cancer of the cervix.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Capital allocations are made each year to regional health authorities, and by them to their district health authorities. The capital allocation to the Northern regional health authority for the year 1985-86 is £39·037 million. It is for individual authorities to determine how much of that money is spent on medical equipment and on which specific items.

Newcastle district health authority and its medical advisory committee have spent their past allocations for medical equipment on other items to which they attached higher priority, as they were quite entitled to do. We do not know whether it is accurate to claim that this is the only teaching hospital in the country not to have a laser. Arguments of that kind cannot in any event be the sole determinent of judgments about priorities between equipment for patient services.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of ambulance service work is involved in dealing with emergencies; and how this is reflected in current pay levels.

Mr. John Patten: Nine per cent. of the total number of patient journeys by road made by ambulance services in England in 1983 were emergency cases. Emergencies are dealt with by staff in the grades of qualified ambulanceman and leading ambulanceman, who are paid higher rates than staff who are employed exclusively on transporting patients not requiring full ambulance care.

Hospital Employees (Safety)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the adequacy of current standards of safety for employees in National Health Service hospitals; and how such standards are monitored.

Mr. John Patten: Responsibility for the safety of health service staff is a matter for the health authorities concerned, subject to control and inspection by the Health and Safety Inspectorate. We are concerned that high standards of safety should at all times be maintained in the National Health Service and that all employing authorities and their staffs should comply fully with the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act. The Department co-operates closely with the Health and Safety Executive in developing solutions to problems of health and safety and through the Health Service Advisory Committee provides an open forum in which health authorities and staff associations may raise any problem affecting the health and safety of staff.

These arrangements are working well and I can assure my hon. Friend that I know of no instance where a health authority has failed to comply with the requirements of a Crown enforcement notice issued by an inspector.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the organisations which have agreed to take part in the consultations on the setting up of an appeals mechanism in respect of drugs not on the limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have had detailed discussions with the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association and the Royal College of General Practitioners about the possible form of an appeal mechanism. After these discussions, on 16 April I wrote to the committee setting out our proposals. We have invited the Joint Consultants Committee, the Central Committee for Hospital Medical Services, the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee, the Society of Family Practitioner Committees and the Society of Administrators of the Family Practitioner Service to comment on these proposals.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the application of his limited list of prescribable drugs in the case of Louise Lavin, a resident in the constituency of the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, for whom a doctor has prescribed a drug which is no longer available on the National Health Service, which her family cannot afford and for which there is no alternative on the limited list; and if there is any action he will be taking.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have just received the right hon. Member's letter of 19 April about his constituent. I shall write to the right hon. Member as soon as possible. Our selected list contains a full range of drugs in the therapeutic categories concerned to meet all the clinical needs of patients.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many laser machines are in operation (a) in England and (b) in the Northern region in the National Health Service for the treatment of the early signs of cervical cancer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally. Decisions on the purchase of items of medical equipment must be made locally by those best able to judge the priority in terms of patient care between bids for new equipment.

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been spent in the last 12 months (a) in England and (b) in the Northern region by the National Health Service on cervical smear tests.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect sufficient detailed figures and information centrally to be able to make a useful estimate of total expenditure on cervical smear tests carried out within the National Health Service.

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in the Northern region have been given cervical smear tests in the last 12 months by the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of tests may not correspond exactly to the number of women tested and we do not hold centrally information on the number of women screened. In 1983, the latest year for which information is available centrally, the number of National Health Service cervical cytology tests performed in the Northern regional health authority was 172,123.

Domiciliary Nebulisers

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will allow domiciliary nebulisers to be prescribed on the National Health Service.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 9 November 1984, at column 48.

Primary Health Care (Review)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute a comprehensive review of primary health care along similar lines to the one over a two-year period being arranged for community nursing services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Green Paper on primary health care services, which we expect to publish in the summer, is intended to stimulate an informed debate among the professions and the public. This should provide the necessary background information on which to base decisions about the future of primary health care. We are still considering the question of a review of community nursing services.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for England" was not published in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1983 or 1984; and if there are any plans to publish it in 1985 or subsequent years.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Warnock Committee

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many organisations and individuals have commented on the Warnock committee recommendations; how many have supported the recommendations relating to research; and how many have opposed them.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received comments from 237 organisations. Of the 171 who referred to the recommendations on research, 99 were broadly in favour and 72 against. We have received over 4,000 letters about the report from individuals, nearly all of which express concern about research on human embryos.

Mr. Dick Clements

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if Mr. Dick Clements, while he was on secondment from his Department to Hospital Hygiene Services, was in contact with officials of his Department about the dismissal of Hospital Hygiene Services from a contract with the local district health authority for the cleaning of Orpington hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Mr. Clements resigned from our Department in July 1984. We have not been involved in the dispute between Hospital Hygiene Services and Bromley district health authority.

NHS (Leaflets)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library copies of the responses which he receives from those hospitals and health centres to whom he plans to send leaflets describing progress in the National Health Service under this Administration.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 355]: Distribution of copies of the leaflet was arranged by regional health authorities. To date, we have received centrally only two responses from any source and I am arranging for copies of these to be placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what number of (a) firms and (b) workers are covered by wages council orders in each region.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of the number of workers covered by wages councils in each region are not available. The number of establishments on the register in each wages inspectorate division is given in the following table.

Establishments on Wages Inspectorate's Register, January 1985

Division	Number
London (East)	22,801
London (West)	25,744
South Eastern	24,920
Southern	27,612
Eastern	24,677
South Western	31,161
Midlands (East)	29,946
Midlands (West)	30,534
North West (East)	24,954
North West (West)	24,309
Yorkshire and Humberside	34,401
Northern	20,848
Scotland (East)	18,695
Scotland (West)	17,528
Wales	18,171

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms in the west midlands region covered by wages council orders have been visited for each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the west midlands division of the Wages Inspectorate, inspections by visit were carried out at 2,045 establishments in 1982, 1,892 in 1983 and 2,048 (provisional) in 1984. These figures do not include checks of workers' pay by methods not involving a visit.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms in the west midlands region covered by wages council orders have been found to be underpaying for each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the west midlands division of the Wages Inspectorate one or more workers were found to have been underpaid at 666 establishments in 1982, 543 in 1983 and 552 (provisional) in 1984.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms in the west midlands region have been prosecuted for illegal underpayment of workers in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what procedure is used by the Wages Inspectorate to check on wages paid.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Inspection procedures include interviewing workers to verify that the amounts shown as paid in the employer's wage record correspond with the amounts received by the workers.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Wages Inspectorate always interviews employees when it visits firms to check whether wage levels meet the legal minimum.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether employers are notified before wages inspectors visit their premises to check on wage levels being paid.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Whether or not employers are notified in advance depends on the circumstances. However, in most cases no advance warning is given by inspectors.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms have been prosecuted in each region for failure to keep records of wages paid in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1982 one employer in the northern division of the Wages Inspectorate was prosecuted under the Wages Councils Act 1979 for failure to keep wage records. There were no prosecutions for this offence in 1983 and 1984.

Information Technology (Training)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many mode A youth training schemes in the London area provide training primarily in information technology skills.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are 18 mode A youth training schemes in London which offer training primarily in information technology skills. All youth training schemes contain an introduction to computer literacy and information technology as part of the training programme.

Youth Training

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Manpower Services Commission has an ongoing consultation scheme with local schools to establish the current requirements for school leavers on youth training schemes.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The careers service carries out twice-yearly local surveys of the intentions of school leavers. We take account of these surveys when planning youth training scheme provision.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ensure that monitoring of youth training schemes is adequate to prevent managing agents getting into arrears with trainees' allowances.

Mr. Peter Morrison: When setting up schemes the Manpower Services Commission considers whether the organisation involved has or will have the resources to carry out its financial responsibilities, including the payment of trainee allowances. Regular monitoring visits are made at least three times a year to all managing agents which include ensuring that the calculation and payment of trainee allowances is being carried out properly.

Redundancies

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of confirmed redundancies in each of the metropolitan counties, and in each of the metropolitan districts for each quarter since the beginning of 1981; and if he will give a breakdown by industry of these figures.

Mr. Peter Bottomley The available information is as follows. An industrial breakdown of these figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Redundancies confirmed as due to occur from 1981 to 1984 in metropolitan counties† and districts†*

Diving Operations (Decompression Techniques)

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to prohibit the use of surface decompression techniques during North sea diving operations except in the case of an emergency.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A Government-sponsored research project is currently being undertaken to examine the problems associated with decompression practices in North sea diving operations and, as necessary, to advise on modification and safe procedures. Further action will be considered in the light of the research results.

Accounting and Financial Records

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will instruct the Manpower Services commission to require that all companies in receipt of funds from them have complied with company law in respect of accounting and financial records.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In setting up schemes the Manpower Services Commission makes thorough checks on the financial position of managing agents, including reference to Companies House records. The Registrar of Companies is ultimately responsible, of course, for ensuring compliance with the requirements of the Companies Act.

KBS Manpower Ltd.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will hold an inquiry into the circumstances of the withdrawal of Manpower Services Commission funding from KBS Manpower.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. I am satisfied that the Manpower Services Commission was right to terminate its agreement with KBS Manpower Ltd.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many health and safety inspectors there were in Wales in 1978 and 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In April 1978 there were 80 inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive in Wales. In April 1984 there were 66.

Beer

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in real terms for the price of beer over the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the five years to March 1985 the price of beer increased by 74 per cent. compared with an increase of 45 per cent. in the "all items" retail prices index.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces came under the jurisdiction of the Health and Safety Executive; what percentage have been visited by health and safety inspectors; what percentage of those visited were issued with improvement or prohibition notices; what percentage of those issued with notices responded satisfactorily; what percentage were monitored, and in what way, so as to assess the level of the response; and if in each case he will distinguish between: (a) Crown and (b) non-Crown work places.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 19 April 1985, c. 298]: In 1983 there were some 614,000 establishments on the registers of the Health and Safety Executive's inspectors; there was also an unknown number of unregistered premises and transport sites. HSE inspectors made 241,000 visits in 1983 including visits to previously unregistered premises and transient sites. Information on Crown and non-Crown premises and on the number of separate establishments visited could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Compliance with all notices is monitored, usually through follow-up visits to the workplace concerned. 8,608 notices were issued in 1983. Of those which have expired and the final outcome of which has been recorded centrally, 98 per cent. of Crown notices and 99 per cent. of non-Crown notices were complied with.

WALES

Educational Expenditure (Clwyd)

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a table showing (a) the current educational expenditure excluding meals and milk in constant 1983-84 cost terms, (b) the pupil numbers in full-time equivalents, (c) the teacher numbers in service in full-time equivalents (d) the pupil-teacher ratio overall, for each year in Clwyd from 1979-80 to the latest available year.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information is as follows:

Clwyd County Council
*(a) Education Current Expenditure excluding Meals and Milk (1983-84 real terms)

	£ million
1979-80	75·9
1980-81	80·0
1981-82	82·4
1982-83	84·1
1983-84	86·4

* Cash deflated to 1983-84 prices using the GDP deflator which measures changes in prices in the economy as a whole.

(b) Pupil and Teacher Numbers (full-time equivalents) and overall Pupil Teacher Ratios (Nursery, Primary and Secondary Schools)

	Pupils (fte)	Teachers in service (fte)	PTR overall
1979-80	74,765	3,914	19·1

1981-82	71,439	3,787	18·9
1982-83	69,983	3,799	18·4
1983-84	68,881	3,869	17·8

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received the 1984 report of the all Wales advisory panel for the development of services for mentally handicapped people.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Yes. The report emphasises that one of the most significant contributions of the strategy is that the amount of discussion and commitment to the rights of mentally handicapped people has risen to an unprecedented level throughout Wales. The report highlights many of the central concerns raised by the strategy, but in particular stresses the importance of people at all levels and from all agencies being able to plan, train and work together with mentally handicapped people and their representatives. I fully endorse that view and believe it is only in this manner that appropriate services will be provided to enable mentally handicapped people to live normal lives in their own communities. The report is to be widely distributed and I hope that all those involved in the mental handicap strategy throughout Wales will read it and take due note of the panel's advice on the priorities for the coming year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Job Creation

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish for 1984 the number of jobs created by the Industrial Development Board and Local Enterprise Development Unit distinguishing between jobs resulting from new inward investment, new indigenous investment, expansion of existing concerns and total investment for the Industrial Development Board and new companies from within Northern Ireland, expanding companies and the total for the Local Enterprise Development Unit distinguished between manufacturing and service industries.

Dr. Boyson: In the calendar year 1984 the Industrial Development Board and Local Enterprise Development Unit provided a total of 8,840 jobs. The breakdown is as follows:

IDB

Jobs from new Inward Investment in
- (a) Manufacturing Industry=653.
- (b) Service Industry=19.

Jobs from new indigenous investment in
- (a) Manufacturing Industry=264.
- (b) Service Industry=Nil.

Jobs from expansions of existing concerns in
- (a) Manufacturing Industry=4,091.
- (b) Service Industry=92.

Note: The Industrial Development Board normally accounts for its achievements on a financial year basis, ending on 31 March, and it is intended to publish the results for the 1984-85 year on 1 May 1985.

LEDU

Jobs from new companies within Northern Ireland in
- (a) Manufacturing Industry=1,652.
- (b) Service Industry=724.

Jobs from expansions of existing companies in
- (a) Manufacturing Industry=814.
- (b) Service Industry=141.

Total jobs arising from Enterprise Grant Scheme=390.

Social Conditions

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies have been conducted by his Department concerning social conditions in Northern Ireland in the last five years.

Dr. Boyson: The Government have conducted a wide range of studies of different aspects of social conditions; the following have been published:

Department of Finance and Personnel, Northern Ireland:
- Occasional Papers by the Policy Planning and Research Unit:
  - Paper No. 1 – "Family Finance Survey (Northern Ireland)".
  - Paper No. 2 – "Take-up of Family Income Supplement".
  - Paper No. 4 – "Domestic Fuel Use and Expenditure among Low Income Groups".
  - Paper No. 6 – "Families Sharing Poverty".
- Annual Northern Ireland Continuous Household Survey.
- Annual Family Expenditure Survey.
- Northern Ireland Annual Abstract of Statistics.

The Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland:
- Report of Advisory Committee on Infant Mortality and Handicap in Northern Ireland (the Baird Report).

Drinking Practices in Northern Ireland.
Children Smoking in Northern Ireland.
Childrens' Dental Health.

The Department of Education for Northern Ireland:
Several Studies on Persistent Non-Attendance at School.

Department of Economic Development, Northern Ireland:
Annual Labour Force Survey.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hand-held Radar Gun

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what modifications in construction and usage have been introduced to the hand-held radar gun following the criticism by a Gwent court in south Wales four years ago.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A report published in 1984 by the Scientific Research and Development Branch of the Home Office, concluded that the hand-held radar speedmeters were accurate and reliable and that the probability of an inaccurate reading was very low when the devices were used in accordance with instructions by a trained officer.

Following the report's recommendations the Association of Chief Police Officers has taken action aimed at ensuring common training standards and the following minor modifications are being made to the devices:

(1) the removal of the HI/LO switch.
(2) the removal of the recall facility.
(3) the fitting of a cut out device which prevents the operation of the speedmeter when the battery supply falls below the minimum operating voltage specified by the manufacturer.

These changes are being made in the interests of simplicity of operation.

Local Government (Grant Applications)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average time applications for grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 are with his Department.

Mr. Waddington: In normal circumstances, a decision can be taken on a straightforward application which is accompanied by appropriate supporting information within about three months. Currently, however, the Department is engaged on a review of all posts approved for section 11 grant under the arrangements in force before 1 January 1983 to see if they meet current criteria. In consequence, new applications have been taking somewhat longer to process. A survey of the 51 applications on which a decision was taken between 1 February and 19 April 1985 shows that the average time taken to reach a decision in those cases was six and a half months.

Charity Commission

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed by the Charity Commission.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 April 1985 the number of staff employed was 330.

Prisons (Mail Bags)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates when visits to prisons in England and Wales where work still takes place on mail bags have been made during the last 12 months by members of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Factories.

Mr. Mellor: During the last 12 months Factory Inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive have visited the following prisons where mail bags are manufactured: Dorchester (9.8.84); Haverigg (17.1.85); Winchester (19.7.84); and Wormwood Scrubs (4.2.85).

Police (Humberside)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions his Department has made repesentations to Humberside county council to appoint a suitably qualified officer to the post of assistant chief constable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement about the failure of Humberside county council police committee to appoint a suitably qualified officer to the post of assistant chief constable for Humberside police; and what information he has received of the effect of that failure on policing in Humberside.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I regret that one of the two assistant chief constable posts has been vacant for over a year. The Department has written seven times to Humberside police authority since December 1983 to urge them to make an appointment. It remains our view that two posts at this level are necessary in Humberside and the chief constable has had to arrange for essential duties to be carried out by other officers. The force remains efficient.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary have made to Humberside police committee about its cuts in the police budget and further proposed cuts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police authority has a statutory duty to maintain an adequate and efficient force for the area. No representations have been made by the Department about the force budget. The advice of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary to my right hon. and learned Friend and to police authorities is given in confidence.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the report on the 1984 annual inspection by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary of Humberside police to the Humberside police committee; what recommendations were contained therein with reference to the appointment of a suitably qualified assistant chief constable; and whether those recommendations have been observed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under section 38 of the Police Act 1964, Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary report to my right hon. and learned Friend: their reports are made in confidence, as are any recommendations they make a police authority on matters within its statutory responsibilities.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the execution of statutory duties by those responsible for the policing in Humberside.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from my hon. Friend, from other hon. Members and from a Conservative member of the Humberside police authority.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers (Collective Responsibility)

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister to what extent she requires Ministers of non-Cabinet rank to observe the doctrine of collective responsibility; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: All members of the Government are bound by the collective responsibility of Ministers for the policies, decisions and actions of the Government.

East Timor

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister if the subject of the Indonesian invasion and continued occupation of East Timor was raised during her recent visit to Indonesia; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: East Timor was among the subjects I discussed in Indonesia but the details of the talks must of course remain confidential.

Civil Servants (Political Affiliations)

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister how many employees of Government Departments and in other work subject to Civil Service rules and regulations are known to have had Fascist affiliations.

The Prime Minister: It would not be appropriate to give information relating to the political affiliations of such employees.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Broadcast Group

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how soon he will be able to make a statement on the future of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office broadcast group.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be able to make an announcement soon.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Scheduled Offences (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara askd the Attorney-General how many cases concerning scheduled offences for each year since 1973 have been referred to (a) the Northern Ireland Court of Appeal and (b) the House of Lords; and in how many cases the original conviction has been quashed, upheld or upheld with a reduced sentence.

The Attorney-General: Records kept by the Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland of persons who appealed to the court of Appeal against conviction and/or sentence in respect of conviction for scheduled offences since 1973 show the position to be as in the chart:

Year	Appeals Against Conviction
	Withdrawn	Dismissed	Upheld
1973	Nil	1	Nil
1974	8	7	5
1975	9	12	4

Records kept by the Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland of appeals to the House of Lords arising from convictions for scheduled offences since 1973 show the position to be as follows:

Year	Persons	Result
1978	1	Appeal dismissed
1981	1	Appeal dismissed

There is no consolidated record of the variations in sentences ordered by the Court of Appeal.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the public sector borrowing requirement as a percentage of gross domestic product in each year since 1955 in the United Kingdom compared with the United States of America, Germany, France, Italy and Japan.

Mr. Peter Rees: Public sector borrowing requirements are not generally available for other countries. In any case, the figures would not be comparable owing to differences in institutional coverage of public sector accounts.

Comparisons of general Government financial balances are less problematic but should still be interpreted with caution. The OECD publishes comparable statistics of general Government financial balance as a proportion of GDP/GNP. The IMF statistics published in the "International Financial Statistics Yearbook" are based mainly on national definitions of central Government and are thus not strictly comparable. The OECD figures for United Kingdom, United States, Germany, France, Italy and Japan are only published for 1960 and 1965-83, and are as in the table shown.

General Government financial balances as percentage of GDP/GNP (market prices)

Consolidated Fund (Unused Balances)

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate, pursuant to the answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 244, whether a symbol relating to non-surrender to the Consolidated Fund of unused balances was likewise omitted in error from the Supply Estimates in respect of the Votes sought for the purposes specified in Class V, 10, C2, and in Class VIII, 4, B5; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Betting Duty

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conclusions he reached as a result of the review of betting duty promised in Standing Committee on the Finance Bill 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: After a careful review taking account of representations received, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer concluded that these duty rates should remain unchanged.

Public Sector (Expenditure)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage of gross domestic product disbursed by the public sector in each year since 1960; and if he will publish a graph showing this data in the Official Report.

Mr. Peter Rees: General Government expenditure on goods and services, which constitutes the Government contribution to the expenditure measure of the gross domestic product, is published on page 153 of the 1985 Economic Trends annual supplement. The table also includes statistics on Government transfer payments, net lending and total expenditure. The gross domestic product at market prices is shown on page 8 of the same publication.

THE ARTS

Calke Abbey

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if, pursuant to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 257, he will state (a) how many of the contents of Calke Abbey accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax possessed a tax-discharge value of over £20,000 each; and whether he will specify the items heading that category, up to the number of 20, together with the amounts of tax satisfied in respect of each of them and (b) how many of the contents of Calke Abbey accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax possessed a tax-discharge value of less than £2,000 each, and what percentage this category represented in relation to the total number of items accepted.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is:

(a) Twelve of the items accepted from Calke Abbey in lieu of tax possessed—tax discharge values over £20,000 and the total amount of tax satisfied in this way was £347,000.

Items	Amount of tax satisfied £'000s

(b) About 1,400 of the items accepted from Calke possessed a tax discharge value of less than £2,000 each; these represented about 90 per cent. of the total number of items accepted.

ENERGY

Sizewell Reactor

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department has had any discussions with the Westinghouse Corporation about the choice and construction of a reactor at Sizewell.

Mr. Goodlad: The choice of a Westinghouse design of the PWR and the selection of contractors are the responsibility of the CEGB, subject, of course, to the need for statutory consents and the outcome of the inquiry being conducted by Sir Frank Layfield.

As was made clear at the time, on 1 July 1981, at column 373-74, Westinghouse was involved in the task force established by the National Nuclear Corporation and the CEGB to carry forward work on the design so that it could meet United Kingdom safety requirements. My Department was kept informed of the progress made by that task force.

My Department has had occasional informal contacts with Westinghouse, as with other companies in the nuclear industry, about the possible contractual arrangements for the construction of Sizewell B, should I decide to grant the CEGB's application.

TRANSPORT

Felixstowe Dock and Railway Bill

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to report formally on the Felixstowe Dock and Railway Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have nothing to add to my reply of 25 April 1985, at column 541-42.

Worksop Bypass

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the plans at the public inquiry for the A57 Worksop bypass showed the height of the road as 14ft above ground level at Rufford street; if this has subsequently been changed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Plans at the public inquiries held into the A57 Worksop bypass in 1978 and 1982 showed the maximum height of the short embankment adjacent to Rufford street as 6·56 metres (about 21ft 6in) above existing ground level. This has not been changed and the embankment has now been built.

DEFENCE

Team Spirit Manoeuvres

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the British observers' attendance at the Team Spirit manoeuvres in South Korea.

Mr. Stanley: It is a normal part of the duties of our defence attachés to observe, when possible, military exercises conducted by the forces of the countries to which they are accredited.

Falkland Islands

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of sending two staff cars to the Falklands; and how many miles of metalled road they will be used upon in the Islands.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that the cost would be approximately £700 but no staff cars have been sent to the Falklands and there are no present plans to send any.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 386, if the cost to be charged by British Airways for the transportation of troops to the Falkland Islands is less than the current cost to his Department, when the effect of the completion of the airport runway is taken into account.

Mr. Stanley: A direct cost comparison is not possible. As I said to the hon. Member in my reply on 22 April it is not possible to separate the cost of moving military personnel and freight from that of civilian personnel and freight, and this applies to the cost of movements by both air and sea.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis British Airways has been awarded a contract to transport troops to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) on 30 October 1984 at c. 932. As I said to the hon. Member in my reply of the 17 April, discussions with British Airways are being concluded for the award of a six-month contract for the carriage of passengers and freight by wide-bodied aircraft to Mount Pleasant airport from next month.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian personnel have been transported to the Falkland Islands in each month since January 1984; what charges have been made for this transport; and by whom such cost is met.

Mr. Stanley: Central records are not maintained in this form. The level of charge, if any, will depend on the category of the passenger. The costs may be met by the Ministry of Defence, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the individual's employer or the individual himself.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the nature, tonnage and cost of all civilian freight transported to the Falkland Islands in the last year; and what charges were made for the cost of transportation.

Mr. Stanley: This information is not available within the Department and could not be assembled except at disproportionate cost.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985."

Mr. Heseltine: I intend to publish this year's "Statement on the Defence Estimates" on Wednesday 1 May.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mentally Ill Persons (West Midlands)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of places which have been available in day centres for the mentally ill in the west midlands region in each year since 1979; what specific assistance he proposes to give to health authorities to enable them to achieve the targets of provision laid down in the 1971 White Paper entitled "Better Services for the Mentally Handicapped"; and what additional resources he will allocate in order to effect the recommendations of the recent report of the Social Services Committee on the care of the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped in the community.

Mr. John Patten: Information, relating to 31 March 1984, on the numbers of places in day centres for mentally ill people in each of the local authorities in the west midlands region, is given in the table. Information for previous years is given in the Department's annual publication entitled "Day Centres for the Mentally Ill, the Elderly and the Younger Physically Handicapped — England", copies of which are in the Library.

West Midlands (Local Authorities)	Number of Places	Net Number of Places*
Hereford and Worcester	190	190
Shropshire	20	20
Staffordshire	259	259
Warwickshire	0	121
Birmingham	100	100
Coventry	100	150
Dudley	70	70
Sandwell	50	50
Solihull	25	25
Walsall	0	30
Wolverhampton	50	50

* Includes places made available to local authorities by voluntary and other organisations.

We have asked health authorities to give priority to the development of community based services for people with mental handicap or mental illness from within their existing resources. Progress has been assisted by a number of centrally funded initiatives; £9 million has been made available over four years from 1983-84 to help health authorities with special problems move mentally handicapped children out of long-stay hospitals into more appropriate forms of care. Total joint finance allocations will amount to about £100 million this year.

The Government are still considering the recommendations of the Social Service Committee's report. We expect to provide a full response to the report in May.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make special provision for social services departments to enable them to expand care facilities for mentally handicapped children who no longer have parents or grandparents to look after them.

Mr. John Patten: It is for each local authority to determine the appropriate level of care facilities for individual mentally handicapped children, as they are best placed to decide on priorities in the light of overall local circumstances. We are neither empowered, nor persuaded that there is a need, to make special allocations to local authorities, but NHS joint finance is available for selected personal social service schemes including schemes for mentally handicapped children. As indicated in my hon. Friend's reply on 6 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mr. Galley) at column 611 the recommendations in the recent report on services for handicapped children by the Department's Social Work Service — a copy of which is in the Library — are designed to assist local authorities to remedy known deficiencies by making more cost-effective use of the resources available.

NHS (Hospital Hygiene)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the adequacy of current hygiene standards in National Health Service hospital kitchens; and how such standards are monitored.

Mr. John Patten: The maintenance of standards in particular kitchens is the responsibility of individual health authorities and we expect them to comply with the relevant food hygiene regulations and to allow environmental health officers open access to catering departments and food handling areas in their premises. Recommendations by these officers should be considered immediately within authorities to decide what action is needed.

National Insurance (Earnings Limit)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the yield from abolishing the upper earnings limit for employees for national insurance; and what is his estimate of the numbers affected.

Mr. Whitney: The Government Actuary estimates that abolition of the upper earnings limit for primary class 1 national insurance contributions would yield around £700 million in a full year at 1985-86 rates. Some 1·7 million contributors would be affected.

School Leavers

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Chief Adjudication Officer has issued any recent instructions to adjudication officers concerning the treatment of school leavers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Freud) on 24 April at column 502.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why it has not been considered appropriate for the chemicals normally used to add fluoride ion to the public water supply to be submitted to the Committee on Safety of Medicines and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 140]: I am advised that this substance when used as an addition to the public water supply has not been regarded as a medicinal product and the only other basis on which it might be referred to the Committee on Safety of Medicines is on the question whether an order should be made applying the provisions of the Medicines Act to that substance.

Nuclear War (Medical Supplies)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific progress has been made during the last five years by his Department in establishing methods for stockpiling medical supplies in the event of a nuclear war.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1985, c. 353]: Medical supplies for use in emergencies have been held in central stores for a number of years. The supplies, which are maintained in good useable condition, include beds and bedding, surgical equipment and dressings. Dispersal of these supplies is considered to be necessary to deal with local peacetime emergencies as well as those arising from war, either conventional or nuclear. Some small dispersal programmes have recently been undertaken but, mainly because of the difficulty in identifying suitable local storage accomodation, alternative proposals for dispersing the supplies are being actively considered.

Pharmaceuticals present a different problem because of restricted shelf life and the resource implications of holding perishable stock. Some studies of this separate issue have been undertaken and officials currently have the policy under review.

ENVIRONMENT

Cadmium

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take in order to control and reduce environmental contamination by cadmium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's policy as set out in pollution paper No. 17 is to keep man's total intake of cadmium as low as practicable and to take every opportunity to reduce exposure while taking into account the technical advantages of cadmium and the merits and availability of alternatives. With this in mind, the Government have welcomed the Community Directive on cadmium discharges to water 83/513/EEC as a valuable additional means of reducing environmental contamination by this metal. My Department has issued guidance to the water authorities on the implementation of this directive and will keep the results under review.

No immediate need is foreseen for further measures but the subject is being kept under review and other actions to reduce exposure will be considered as opportunities arise. This is in line with the preventive approach implicit in the Government policy.

Nitrates

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of damage to the environment and to wildlife by the use of nitrates by farmers.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that research carried out by the University of East Anglia has shown that some damage to aquatic vegetation in ditches and rivers within the broads area may have occurred as a result of high levels of nitrate. Further research is to be undertaken.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria his Department uses, in applying its statement of policy of 29 July 1982, Official Report, column 708, for establishing the national interest in decisions regarding the possible exemption of major industrial and commercial developments from the restrictions imposed in respect of areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Macfarlane: There are no formal criteria. Our statement explains the necessity of determining each case on its merits, and it is in that context that questions concerning the national interest would be assessed.

Herons

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of herons; and if their number is declining.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1983 the British Trust for Ornitholiogy estimated the population of herons in England and Wales as 5,150 breeding pairs which showed a slight fluctuation but no significant decline. No comparable figures exist for Scotland, but a figure of 1,500-2,000 breeding pairs has been estimated.

I understand that later this year the BTO will be undertaking a complete census of the heron population, which will provide up to date information for the whole of the United Kingdom.

Humberside

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much Humberside county council has overspent since 1981-82; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is as follows:

*Humberside county council's overspend against target

	£ million
1981-82	14·7
1982-83	48·7
1983-84	10·7
1984-85	†8·1
1985-86	‡6·1

* Targets were defined in "total" expenditure terms in cash in 1982-83 and subsequent years. In 1981-82, they were in terms of current expenditure at November 1980 prices.
† Revised estimate.
‡ Budget.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much rates have increased on average in all county councils since 1981-82; and by how much they have increased in Humberside.

Mr. Waldegrave: Non-metropolitan county councils have on average increased their precepts by 37 per cent. between 1981-82 and 1985-86. Humberside county council has increased its precept by 60 per cent. over this period. The 1981-82 precepts on which these figures are based include any supplementary precepts levied during the year.

London Lesbian and Gay Centre

Mr. Martin Stevens asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision on the grant application made on behalf of the London lesbian and gay centre in Smithfield, EC1.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I shall answer this question shortly.

Rates

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated yield from rates for 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: Based on local authorities' returns, the estimated yield from rates in England in 1984-85 (net of domestic rate relief grant and rate rebates) is £11·1 billion.

Royal Parks Constabulary

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total strength of the Royal Parks constabulary; what is its establishment figure; and if he will break down the figures by posting.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 25 April 1985, c. 550]: The current establishment of the Royal Parks constabulary is 152. The current strength is 148, as follows:

	Superintendent	Chief Inspector	Inspector	Sergeant	Constable	Total
Headquarters
Central parks	1	1	2	1	1	6
St. James's park	—	—	1	3	31	35

Water Authorities (Members)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names, along with their occupations, of the members of the North-West and Welsh water authorities.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply 25 April 1985, c.550]: Details of the members of North-West water and their occupations are as follows.

Membership of the Welsh water authority is however a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

North-West Water Authority

G Mann—Chairman;
T A F Barnes—Chartered Surveyor;
D J Coyles—Retired master painter and decorator;
J A Cropper—Chairman, James Cropper PLC (paper makers);
J D Hamilton—Retired school master;
G E Lowe—Retired production and marketing executive, ICI Ltd Pharmaceuticals Division;
D H McAuslan — Retired technical and services director, Unilever Merseyside Ltd;
J B Oldfield—Chief Executive;
K W Palmer—Retired headmaster;
A Richardson—Farmer and company director;
J B Robinson—Farmer;
F Sanderson—Retired chairman and chief executive, Ames Crosta Babcock Ltd;
R E Weston—Retired refinery manager, Shell UK Ltd

High Technology Site, Bickenhill

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will delay the public inquiries proposed for planning applications concerning the high technology site in Bickenhill until the final determination of the west midlands structure plan and the Marston green and Bickenhill district plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply 25 April 1985, c. 550]: There has been no change in the Government's policy towards green belt. There continues to be a strong presumption against development in the green belt and only in exceptional circumstances will development be permitted. The Government's commitment to the preservation of the green belt is set out in Circular 14/84. If the proposal in the "West Midlands Structure Plan; Proposals for Alteration for new technology development in the general location of the M6/M42 Motorway Interchange", is approved by the Secretary of State, then this will be an approval to the principle of development taking place in this vicinity. The precise location of the development will be determined through other elements of the planning system.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the progress that has been made with the process of preparing the Marston green and Bickenhill district plan for submission to him for determination.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 25 April 1985, c. 550]: The Marston green and Bickenhill local plan has been prepared in draft by West Midlands county council. It is the county council who are responsible for processing it through to adoption. Although my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has reserve powers to call in a local plan for his own determination these are rarely exercised.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy, arising from his review of the west midlands structure plan, concerning the release of green belt land in the west midlands; and if he will make a statement on his proposed application of this policy regarding the precise location of release of green belt land for a high-technology site in Bickenhill.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his answer, 25 April 1985, c. 550]: No. It would not be reasonable to postpone the public inquiries already arranged to start on 14 May to await decisions on the structure and local plans. I am writing to my hon. Friend about the relationship between the proposals for development and the plans.

"Hill Farming and Birds"

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the report by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds entitled "Hill Farming and Birds", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.

We expressed our thanks to the RSPB for this report when it was published last summer at a time when policies for the hills and uplands were under review both nationally and in the Community. The Community discussions have now led to agreement on new farm structures measures which include a new approach for environmentally sensitive areas for which we pressed strongly. We shall be taking careful account of the RSPB recommendations in implementing the new measures.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

COCOM Regulations

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the new COCOM regulations will be published; what period of time will elapse after publication before they come into effect; and what is the reason for the delay in publication.

Mr. Channon: I expect to make a new Export of Goods (Control) Order shortly; and to publish it on or about 12 June. It will enter into force six weeks after publication. It has not proved possible to publish the order earlier because of certain technical difficulties in its preparation.

British Overseas Trade Board

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why the funding of the services of the British Overseas Trade Board is being reduced by more than 10 per cent. in real terms in 1986-87; and what effect this will have on exports.

Mr. Channon: The budget of the British Overseas Trade Board is to remain broadly constant in cash terms at about £27·5 million in 1984-5 and £27·4 million in 1986-7.

All aspects of Government policy are naturally subject to public expenditure constraint. But I am confident this will not seriously affect British export activity. It is essential to ensure that the funds provided are being used most effectively. I believe that the changes now made by the BOTB will do this, helping newcomers into overseas markets, and that the assistance will be of particular help to smaller and medium sized firms.

Manufactured Goods (Trade Imbalance)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the statistical basis for the figures given for group 418 starch on pages 10 and 15 of the memorandum submitted by his Department to the Trade and Industry Committee and reproduced in its report on the growth in the imbalance of trade in manufactured goods, Session 1983-84.

Mr. Channon: The component series used in the calculation of the ratios given in the UK memorandum submitted to the Trade and Industry Committee are series for sales by UK manufacturers of the principal products classified to each activity heading in the standard industrial classification (Revised 1980) and the "Overseas Trade Statistics" analysed by industry. Home demand is calculated as sales by UK manufacturers plus imports less exports.

In the case of starch, group 418 of the standard industrial classification, sales by UK manufacturers of the principal products of the industry are extracted from the results of the Quarterly Sales Inquiry conducted by the business statistics office. Sales of waste products and receipts for work done are excluded, and an estimate is made for the sales of establishments not contributing to the inquiry.

In the published analysis of overseas trade by industrial category each tariff code in the "Overseas Trade Statistics" is allocated to the appropriate activity heading in the standard industrial classification. For the starch industry, therefore, the estimates of overseas trade represent total trade in all tariff codes thought to be principal products of group 418 of the standard industrial classification. The ratios in table B1 of the memorandum are constructed using trade figures calculated on this basis. In the analysis of trade performance published in "Business Monitor MQ12", "Import Penetration and Export Sales Ratios for Manufacturing Industry", a further refinement is incorporated. Tariff codes identified to be waste products or second hand goods are excluded from imports and exports in order to bring the trade figures as near as possible to the same coverage as sales by UK manufacturers. The ratios given in table B2 of the memorandum are compiled on this basis.

In most industries, trade identified as waste products or second hand goods is negligible and even more so when import penetration (or export performance) is broken down by country. Consequently as a result the figures in table B1 are normally consistent with those in table B2 in the memorandum. However, in the case of the starch industry, more than half of the 1982 imports were of waste products. The ratios given in table B1 for this industry are therefore not directly comparable with those given in table B2. Deduction of waste products from EC imports gives a ratio of EC imports (including Spain and Portugal) to home demand of 20 per cent. for the starch industry in 1982. This figure is consistent with those given for the starch industry in table B2 of the memorandum.

US Export Administration Acts

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has, including names and sums involved, of instances of United Kingdom companies which are in the process of being penalised, which have been penalised or which have settled as a result of being threatened with penalties by the United States Government under the United States Export Administration Acts.

Mr. Channon: Information of this kind is sometimes to be found in official United States Government publications or from press reports. More often it comes to my Department through a confidential approach by the United Kingdom company concerned. It would not be appropriate, or helpful to the companies, to give details of such cases.

Timber

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the figures for the imports of (a) hardwoods and (b) softwoods into the United Kingdom during each of the past five years and for the trend in the prices of timber.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

Table A United Kingdom imports of hardwoods and softwoods
Value: £ millions (cif)
Weight: Metric tonnes (thousands)

	1980	1981	1982	1983	*1984

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the consumption of timber per capita compared with the Federal Republic of Germany, France and Italy.

Mr. Channon: The consumption of timber, measured in cubic metres per capita is shown in the table. The figures relate to 1982, the latest year for which full information is available. Timber is defined as including sawn wood, logs, fuelwood, pulpwood and industrial wood but excluding manufactured board, wood pulp, newsprint, paper and paper board.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has requested the Confederation of British Industry to ask member firms to assist enterprise agencies in their areas through the secondment of key personnel.

Mr. Trippier: Although my right hon. Friend has made no representations to the Confederation of British Industry on the secondment of staff to local enterprise agencies, the CBI is a member of Business in the Community and is well aware of the important contribution secondments can make both to the LEAs and to the career development of the secondees themselves.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to publish a Green Paper on enterprise agencies in the near future.

Mr. Trippier: There are no plans to publish a Green Paper on this topic.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will assess the effect on the work of enterprise agencies of the Budget proposals for the elimination of the tax concession on industrial buildings below 1,250 sq ft.

Mr. Trippier: No, but I shall keep the supply of small workshops under review.

Antifouling Paints

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the effect there would be on the production, home sales and export sales of marine antifouling paints if a ban were imposed on organo-tin based compounds.

Mr. Trippier: The Government has proposed to restrict the availability of antifouling paints based on organo-tin compounds for boats under 12 metres in length. No more widespread ban is contemplated. I am aware of the views of the industry but no precise estimate can be made in view of the possibility of substituting alternative antifouling paints.

Regional Development

Mr. Bevan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has decided upon the amount of grant in aid he is making available to each of the five English regional development organisations in 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On the basis of the programmes of promotional activities which each of the five English Regional Development Organisations have submitted to me, I am making available the following amounts of grant in aid in 1985-86:

North of England Development Council (NEDC)	760,000
Yorkshire & Humberside Development Association (YHDA)	400,000
Devon & Cornwall Development Bureau (DCDB)	210,000
West Midlands Industrial Development Association (WMIDA)	130,000
North West Industrial Development Association (NORWIDA)	75,575*

* For six months.

The NEDC, YHDA and DCDB are meeting the conditions which I laid down for non-matching funding, and their grant in aid is therefore not linked to pound for pound matching arrangements with the local authorities. WMIDA has been established for only one full year and its grant in aid, which has been increased to £130,000, remains conditional on matching funding. The grant in aid to NORWIDA will also remain conditional on the local authorities continuing to match the DTI contribution on a pound-for-pound basis. I shall be prepared to enter into further discussions about the provision of additional grant in aid for NORWIDA or a successor body for the second half of 1985-86.

Battery-powered Dog Collars

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to ban the import of battery-powered dog collars which deliver an electric shock when the dog barks.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to the reply, 24 April 1985; c. 460]: It is an offence under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 to cause any unnecessary suffering to a domestic or captive animal. If these collars caused cruelty to a dog it would be illegal to use them. If the use of the collars is found to be illegal a ban on their imports could be considered. But at present it is not illegal to use or sell the collars in the United Kingdom, and, unless the situation changes, it would not be appropriate to ban their import.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC (Surplus Products)

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount spent by the EC in 1984 on storing surpluses of milk products, sugar, cereals, beef, wine, fruit, and so on and other products, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: The following table sets out provisional figures for expenditure in 1984 from the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund on public storage, including losses on sale and private storage by commodity. Community statistics do not differentiate between the cost of storing surpluses and storage costs incurred on produce which is subsequenly consumed within the Community.

Nitrates

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will take steps to encourage farmers to reduce the use of nitrates;

(2) what guidance his Department issues to farmers on the use of nitrates.

Mrs. Fenner: So as to ensure the efficient use of nitrates and other nitrogenous fertilisers while reducing as far as practicable the risks of pollution, farmers are encouraged by my Department to restrict application of such fertilisers to those times when the crops can utilise the nitrogen. Autumn and winter applications should therefore be avoided unless there is a specific crop requirement.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the amount of nitrates used on farms in each of the last 10 years, and the purposes for which it was used.

Mrs Fenner: The table gives the amount of all forms of nitrogen applied by farmers in England and Wales as inorganic fertiliser (straights and compounds) in each of the years 1974-75 to 1983-84:

	'000 tonnes plant food
1974-75	787·5
1975-76	850·8
1976-77	879·0
1977-78	924·0
1978-79	941·0
1979-80	1,031·0
1980-81	1,100·0
1981-82	1,180·0
1982-83	1,227·0
1983-84	1,316·0

The Survey of Fertiliser Practice, compiled jointly by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, the Fertiliser Manufacturers Association and Rothamsted experimental station, contains details of fertiliser use. The following information is taken from the latest edition (1983) and relates to average nitrogen applications:

All nitrogen use on tillage and grass 1974-83 (overall kg/ha)
England and Wales

	Tillage	Grass	All crops and grass
1974	85	94	91
1975	86	99	94
1976	96	98	97
1977	99	110	105
1978	104	113	107
1979	112	117	114
1980	121	119	120
1981	135	125	130
1982	141	123	132
1983	154	125	139

In 1984 the average application on all crops and grass amounted to 147 Kg N/ha.

Poultry

Mr. Skeet asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent he estimates that the replacement of meat by poultry consumption in the United Kingdom is due to its low cholesterol content.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department has no estimates of the influence of cholesterol content on the replacement of meat by poultry in the United Kingdom diet. However, since the cholesterol contents of both meat and poultry are similar, it is unlikely to be the reason for increased poultry consumption.

Mr. Skeet asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many diseases are known by his Department to affect poultry; whether the pattern is changing with the continued application of existing drugs; and to what extent biotechnology through genetic engineering has provided more resilient strains.

Mrs. Fenner: There are three notifiable diseases of poultry — Newcastle disease, fowl plague and paramyxovirus of pigeons, and innumerable other non-notifiable diseases. There is no evidence that the pattern of any of the diseases is being influenced by the application of drugs. Genetic engineering has been applied to the production of new vaccines in animal disease but to date no improved vaccines have been produced in the poultry field.

Mr. Skeet asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether factory methods of poultry production show diminishing returns of output with the length of performance of this type of farming.

Mr. MacGregor: In all laying poultry, egg production reaches a peak some six to eight weeks after commencement of lay; thereafter the rate of egg production slowly declines. Research undertaken over a number of years indicates that the rate of decline in egg laying is lower in birds housed in cage systems than in those kept under other conditions.

Dairy Farming

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made at EC deliberations to have direct income aids made available to small dairy farmers attempting to remain in this category of farming.

Mr. MacGregor: When the Council agreed on measures for the introduction of milk quotas in 1984 it agreed at the same time to the continuation for two years of the Community scheme to aid small milk producers. Under this scheme in the United Kingdom payments of £209.20 were made in December 1984 to individual producers delivering less than 200,000 litres in 1983. Under the existing provisions further payments will become due in the 1985-86 marketing year.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set up a departmental working party as to the future profitable use of land taken out of dairy production by the milk production outgoers scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: No. Producers opting for the outgoers scheme will have thought carefully about the alternatives available to them. In addition the staff of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service are available to offer advice to individual producers.

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1955 the number of agricultural holdings larger than the threshold below which minor holdings have been excluded from the census from time to time; and if he will distinguish the number of tenanted holdings.

Mrs. Fenner: I will publish the available information in the Official Report as soon as possible.

Farm Holdings (Payments)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the proportion of public expenditure on agriculture devoted to farm holdings of more than 1,000 standard man-days.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that this information is not available.

Beef

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the latest figures available of the intervention stocks of beef in each member country of the EC; and how such figures compare with those at a comparable time one and three years ago.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is given in the following table:

Stocks of beef in public intervention

Milk (Outgoers Scheme)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any record is maintained by his Department of the use to which farmers put land in respect of which payments have been made under the outgoers scheme relating to cessation of milk production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985, c. 387]: A successful applicant under the outgoers scheme is not required to inform my Department of the use to which he puts his land once he ceases production. Each farmer's circumstances are very different and we did not consider it desirable to seek to direct them into particular sectors. We took the view that each individual should be free to determine the direction of his business in the light of his own commercial judgment.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any savings will be made in the expenditure of the common agricultural policy in circumstances where farmers compensated under the outgoers scheme relating to the cessation of milk production use the land in question for the production of beef; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985, c. 387]: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the effect on expenditure under the CAP. The outgoers scheme involves a reallocation of quota from outgoing producers to certain other producers. The effect on beef production depends partly upon whether producers who receive additional quota generate the same supply of calves for fattening as had been supplied by the outgoing producers and partly upon whether the resources released by outgoers are used to produce different commodities from those which would otherwise have been produced by those receiving additional quota. Given the likely wide variety of responses between producers, due to differences in circumstances, it is not possible to estimate reliably the overall effect on beef production.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the amount which will fall to be paid to farmers seeking payments under the outgoers scheme under which agreement is secured that milk will not be produced; how many applications have been received for payments under this scheme; and what acreage and what number of cows he estimates will be affected by the applications likely to be approved.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1985, c. 387]: In England and Wales, we are aiming to buy in 289 million litres of milk quota, at a cost of just over £37·5 million. By 19 April 1985, some 1,469 producers had submitted claims for payment in respect of 240·5 million litres.

The quota bought up from outgoers will be re-allocated to other producers, who will adjust their production accordingly. It is not possible to estimate the net effect of this, if any, on total cow numbers or on the area used for milk production. This will depend upon whether the husbandry methods of producers benefiting from the re-allocation of quota differ from those of the outgoers.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many men on Merseyside who have been unemployed for over 12 months have been accepted for full-time training by the Manpower Services Commission in the last year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Some 570 men who had been unemployed for over 12 months have been accepted for full-time training by the Manpower Services Commission in the last year.

In addition, some long-term unemployed people, including some 700 in temporary jobs under the community programme, will be undertaking part-time training.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the basis for the levels of salaries for computing and electronics instructors in information technology centres; and what information he has as to the equivalent salaries paid by the training establishments in industry and commerce.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission provides funding for the salaries of computing and electronics instructors in information technology centres up to maximum limits which are based on local authority rates for non-manual workers. However the actual level of salary an instructor receives is of course a matter for individual sponsors.

Information on salaries paid by training establishments in industry and commerce is not held centrally.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many information technology centres have earned revenue in excess of £10,000 during their third year of operation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

TOPS Language Courses

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Manpower Services Commission intends to continue the provision of English as a second language TOPS course.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We plan to continue to provide this training where it is a necessary and cost effective means of improving employment prospects.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) on what criteria the Manpower Services Commission evaluates local requirements for youth training scheme places;

(2) whether the Manpower Services Commission evaluates local requirements for youth training scheme places on both a borough basis and Inner London education authority divisions;

(3) what consideration is given to the academic or non-academic content of the school leaving population in Manpower Services Commission evaluations of local requirements for youth training scheme places;

(4) whether local job opportunities are related to training facilities for the incoming labour force in youth training schemes.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The number and type of youth training scheme places in each locality is determined in consultation with local careers services, on the basis of estimates of the number of young people likely to require places and their training needs, and with local job opportunities kept in mind. In London such planning is undertaken at borough and Inner London Education Authority division level.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Manpower Services Commission is making provision to monitor the proportion of places taken up in mode A schemes by (a) inner city, (b) black and (c) female young people.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Statistical information on the participation of ethnic groups and female youngsters in the youth training scheme is recorded on the Manpower Services Commission's computerised management information system. This system is based on local authority districts and does not, therefore, specifically record information about inner cities except in the case of London, where all the inner city boroughs are local authority districts. The information is regularly monitored by Manpower Services Commission staff.

National Freight Corporation, Sheffield (Fire)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Employment in connection with the fire at the warehouse of the National Freight Corporation in Sheffield on 14 to 16 December 1984, if he will list the dates on which witness statements were taken by the Health and Safety Executive; which specialist branches of the Health and Safety Executive have become involved in the Health and Safety Executive investigation and on which date each specialist branch first became involved; and if any photographs of the fire were taken by the Health and Safety Executive on and after 14 December 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive began its investigation into the causes of the fire and the reasons for its rapid spread on the day after the fire occurred. The investigation was subsequently broadened to include the circumstances in which the fire was fought. The actual fire was not photographed by HSE photographers but photographs were taken subsequently of damage to buildings.

On 17 December 1984 civil engineering inspectors of HSE were called in to advise on the stability of the damaged structure. Other branches of HSE including the field consultant groups, Employment Medical Advisory Service and the research division have been brought in to the investigation as required. A number of witnesses have been interviewed and inquiries continue. The HSE will publish its report as soon as possible but a thorough inquiry of this magnitude and preparation of a report for publication takes several months.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of young people aged 16 to 19 years are in employment in the London borough of Waltham Forest; and what has been the trend in the past four years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information comes from the 1981 "Census of Population" which showed that 52·5 per cent. of young people aged 16 to 19 years living in the London borough of Waltham Forest were in employment.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many women have been unemployed (a) on Merseyside and (b) in Knowsley for more than 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. It is provisionally estimated that there were 14,771 females in the Merseyside metropolitan county who had been unemployed for more than 12 months on 14 March. The corresponding figure for the borough of Knowsley was 2,153. The figures include estimates for those whose claims are not dealt with by computer.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people by age and sex have been unemployed for more than 12 months (a) on Merseyside, (b) in Knowsley and (c) in Kirkby.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The figures relate to unemployed claimants on 10 January 1985, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available.

Young persons under 18 years, unemployed over 12 months

	Male	Female
Merseyside metropolitan county*	405	298
Borough of Knowsley*	68	40
Kirkby jobcentre area	15	12

* Figures are given for best fit jobcentre areas. The area covered by the Kirkby, Prescot and Huyton jobcentres corresponds closely to the Borough of Knowsley.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of persons unemployed in the county of Hampshire; and how many of these are young people who have never experienced normal employment.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 14 March 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the best fit of jobcentre areas to the county of Hampshire was 60,669. Of these 1,127 were under the age of 18 years and had not entered employment since terminating full-time education.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for youth unemployment in the Portsmouth travel-to-work area.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 10 January 1985, the number of unemployed claimants in the old Portsmouth travel-to-work area under 18 years of age was 1,471. This information is not yet available for the new Portsmouth travel-to-work area.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what are the latest figures for female unemployment in the Portsmouth travel-to-work area;

(2) what are the latest figures for male unemployment in the Portsmouth travel-to-work area.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 14 March there were 5,773 unemployed females and 13,538 unemployed males in the Portsmouth travel-to-work area.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: The fall in unemployment in March of 56,000 was a significant improvement on previous months, and although the seasonally adjusted figure increased, that increase was lower than for the previous three months.

The March figures were encouraging, particularly when the employment figures, published on 17 April, showed over 600,000 more people in jobs in December 1984 than in March 1983.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list his Department's principal achievements since 1979.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 774]: I have recently published a White Paper, "Employment, The Challenge for the Nation", which describes the wide range of measures we are taking to help revive the economy, to improve the working of the labour market and to aid the unemployed.

We have made the improvement of Britain's education and training system one of our top priorities and now plan to spend £1·2 billion on training in 1985-86 compared with just £380 million in 1979. We have successfully launched the youth training scheme which offers a year's planned training and work experience to all 16 and some 17-year-old school leavers. Around 700,000 young people have benefited from the Scheme so far and our current estimates show that two-thirds have moved on from the scheme to jobs or further training or education. We have also opened 160 information technology centres to train young people under the youth training scheme in computing and electronic assembly skills. We have now announced a major expansion of the youth training scheme. We aim to provide by 1986 two years training for all 16-year-old school leavers who do not continue in full time education and one year for 17-year-olds—leading to a recognised vocational qualification. We have asked the Manpower Services Commission to begin discussions on a possible scheme with all concerned and to put forward detailed proposals by the end of June. We intend to provide extra funds of £125 million in 1986-87 and £300 million in 1987-8 for this purpose bringing the Government's total investment in youth training to some £1,100 million by 1987-8.

We are also taking a number of other steps to improve education and training for the 14-18 age group.

We have launched the technical and vocational education initiative to broaden the curriculum for 14 to 18-year-olds and relate it more closely to employment needs. Sixty-two projects began in 1983 and 1984 and by 1986 every local education authority which wishes to participate will have had the opportunity to do so.

We have made available £25 million over the next two years for in-service training of teachers to promote developments, particularly related to TVEI.

We have asked the MSC to set in hand a review of vocational qualifications in England and Wales, to ensure that we have a readily understandable system which provides opportunities for people to progress to higher skills and which is really relevant to the world of industry and commerce.

We have enabled the MSC to purchase a more significant proportion of work-related non-advanced further education courses provided by local education authorities in England and Wales to help bring training provision more into line with local employment needs. Discussions are now under way about full implementation of this change from 1986-87 onwards.

The Government's strategy for the 14 to 18-year-old age group is set out in our recently puplished White Paper on education and training for young people.

In the field of adult training we have launched an adult training strategy to make training and retraining for adults more widespread, more flexible and more relevant to modern needs. This involves:

more than doubling, to 250,000 by 1986/7, the number of people assisted by MSC adult training programmes;

—launching the open tech programme to make flexible training facilities more widely available and to help adults who wish to acquire or up-date skills in technical or supervisory occupations; —establishing the skillcentre network on a commercial basis in order to release resources for this expansion of adult training;

—a major campaign to bring home to everyone, employers, trade unions and individuals, the vital importance to our future economic well being of investment and training.

We also published a consultative paper last autumn to seek views on a new pilot scheme to help up to 10,000 adults finance their own training through a Government supported loan scheme.

We have also taken action to assist the mobility of labour. The Manpower Services Commission's placement services have been improved to provide better access for the public and a national computerised vacancy-circulation system has been introduced. The number of jobcentres will be increased to 1065—the highest ever. The MSC has also extended its employment transfer and job search schemes to cover a wide range of skilled jobs.

The professional and executive recruitment was put on a full cost-recovery basis from April 1983. It met that requirement in 1983-84 and again in 1984-85. PER staffing has been reduced from about 800 to around 300 since 1979.

We have conducted a wide-ranging scrutiny to identify burdens on business which may prevent employers taking on new employees. We have already taken a number of steps to reduce the burdens on employers imposed by employment protection law including extending from one to two years the qualifying period for the right to claim unfair dismissal, where the employer has 20 or fewer employees. We have now announced that the two-year qualifying period should apply to all employees, whatever the size of the company. This will come into effect in June.

We have also published a consultation paper on the options for reforming the wages council system (including exempting young people or controlling their rates, and reducing the scope of regulation) or alternatively on whether the system should be abolished. We have asked for comments by the end of May. Subject to the outcome of consultations, we propose to end ratification of International Labour Convention No. 26 which could restrict our freedom to act in the council area of policy.

We have continued with our step-by-step approach to industrial relations reform designed to redress the previous imbalance in collective bargaining and to make trade unions more accountable to their members.

The Employment Acts of 1980 and 1982 have removed trade unions' statutory immunity in relation to a number of unacceptable forms of industrial action, including secondary picketing and secondary action and have increased the protection for individuals against the abuses of the closed shop. From November 1984 no closed shop is enforceable unless it has been approved by an overwhelming majority of employees voting in a secret ballot.

The Trade Union Act 1984 is designed to secure the holding of secret ballots in three areas of crucial importance to trade union members; for elections to union governing bodies, for pre-strike consultations and over the question of trade union involvement in party politics. There are already indications that the Act is having a significant influence on the practices and attitudes of trade unions.

We have taken a wide range of steps to help those hardest hit by unemployment.

We have introduced the job-splitting scheme and the part-time job release scheme to increase opportunities for part-time work, and continued the job release scheme which encourages older people to retire early and vacate their job for a younger unemployed person.

We have also established the community programme which will provide up to 130,000 places for long-term unemployed people on projects of value to the community. I have recently announced a major expansion of the programme by 100,000 places to 230,000 places by May 1986. We have also asked the MSC to examine the scope for greater involvement of the private sector in the programme and to consider whether charities and voluntary organisations would play a better part in helping the long term unemployed.

We have set up the young workers scheme, covering some 61,000 young people and providing an incentive to employers to take on young people at more realistic wage rates which improve their chances of employment by allowing realistically for their age and relative inexperience. This scheme will close for applications in March 1986 so that its resources can contribute to a major expansion in training for young people under an extended youth training scheme.

We have established the voluntary projects programme which has already helped 55,000 people in the past year, including some of the most disadvantaged to undertake useful voluntary work. We have now asked the MSC to consider ways in which the programme could provide further help for the long term unemployed.

The MSC has introduced a new service, the disablement advisary service, to provide advice and assistance to employers on disabled people's employment matters and has also recently launched a voluntary code of good practice on the employment of disabled people.

Expenditure on all these employment and training measures will be an estimated £2,115 million in 1984-85. Spending of £2,391 million has been allocated for 1985-86.

My Department is continuing to play a full part in the work of the European Community bearing on employment and related issues and allocations to the United Kingdom from the European Social Fund have increased from £130 million in 1979 to £353 million in 1984.

The efficiency and effectiveness of all my Department's services have been kept under close scrutiny. The unemployment benefit service has made steady progress in improving its cost-effectiveness through better management practices and more effective use of its resources. Work is well advanced for the introduction, early in 1986, of a more advanced computerised system in unemployment benefit offices involving the installation of some 10,500 visual display units linked to the national benefit computers. This will improve both the quality and speed of service to the customer and result in some 2,000 staff savings when the project is complete.

During the 6 years to April 1985 the total number of permanent staff in the MSC has been reduced by about 4,500 to just under 21,000 over a period when the commission has successfully introduced several major new programmes like the youth training scheme and the community programme.

Reviews have been carried out in the Department which will lead to better use both of accommodation and of management services and new financial information on budgeting systems have been introduced. A second report on implementing the financial management initiative during 1984 was published recently.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 77

SESSION 1984–85

15th April—26th April 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speakers rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading 'Speaker'.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of the volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
